KISSINGER ADVISES CUBA TO BE WARY IN AFRICAN MOVES

He Warns Against Mistaking U.S. Policy on Angola as Indication for Future

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, March 4—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger warned Cuba today to "act with great circumspection" in southern Africa.
Noting the intervention of 12,000 Cuban troops in the Angolan civil war and the cutoff of American aid to forces opposed to the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, which won the war, Mr. Kissinger added that "our actions cannot always be deduced by what we did in Angola."
[Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa gave little encouragement to Rhodesia in a statement on Mozambique's closing its border with Rhodesia. Page 3.]
Mr. Kissinger, in testimony before the House Committee on International Relations, declined to say how, when or where the United States might retaliate against future Cuban military thrusts in Africa or elsewhere.
"We simply cannot be in a position of giving the Cubans an indication of where it is safe for them to go," he said. "But we cannot elevate them to becoming the policemen of Africa."
He may visit South Africa.
Concern over possible future Cuban military activity in Africa has heightened in recent weeks because of the victory in Angola, of Soviet arms and Cuban troops on behalf of the Popular Movement and, in eastern Africa, strife along the border between Mozambique and the forces of the white minority Government of Rhodesia.
As evidence of the Ford Administration's deepening worries about southern Africa, Mr. Kissinger said that he would consider adding South Africa, which is also ruled by a white minority, to an itinerary of black African states that he plans to visit in the latter half of April. That itinerary now includes Nigeria, Zambia, Zaire, Tanzania and several former French and British colonies, he said.

State Expects City Banks To Buy $1 Billion in Notes

Tentative Accord on Purchase Reached Subject to Resolution of Legal Problems —City Hails High Job-Attrition Rate

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times
ALBANY, March 4—Eleven $1.75 billion more in short-term notes to private investors are expected to be purchased by the State of New York City. Fiscal experts said that the purchase of $1 billion in short-term state notes would be extremely difficult to sell in a market—a step that would provide a place that continued to be significant boost for the state's drive to meet its critical financial needs this year.
A tentative agreement on financing the purchase, subject to the resolution of some legal and technical problems, was reached in a private meeting between State Comptroller Arthur Levitt, Mr. Levitt's panel of bankers who are advising the state on its borrowing requirements and top executives of the commercial banks.
"Negotiations are going on now and they're quite complicated," said one banking official involved in the talks. He added:
"There are a lot of lawyers, a lot of bankers and a lot of good will. We have some major hurdles, legal and otherwise, but I think we're going to overcome them."
Agreement on the $1 billion purchase would mean that the state would still have to issue

WHOLESALE PRICES FELL IN FEBRUARY; FOOD KEY FACTOR

Index's 0.5% Drop Marked 4th Consecutive Month of Decline or No Change

INDUSTRIAL RISE SLOWS
Closely Watched Sector Up 0.3%, Smallest Since May —Job Gains Forecast

By EDWIN L. DALE JR.
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, March 4—Further progress in slowing the nation's inflation rate was recorded today as the Labor Department said the Wholesale Price Index declined by five-tenths of 1 percent in February.
This was the fourth consecutive month in which the index either declined or showed no change.
While the drop in February was attributable to the volatile agricultural sector of the economy, there was better news as well in the key industrial part of the index, which is the most closely watched by economic analysts. It rose by three-tenths of 1 percent, the smallest increase since last May.
Stronger Output Growth Seen
The drop in the overall index was on a seasonally adjusted basis, which allows for normal seasonal changes in some prices. Unadjusted, the index showed no change in February, also an encouraging result on the inflation front.
In another development, Alan Greenspan, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, told reporters that, besides the recent better news on inflation, the council now saw signs of stronger growth in production and employment than it had anticipated.
At a breakfast meeting, Mr. Greenspan said it was "very likely" that the nation's total output, as measured by the gross national product, would spur ahead more rapidly in the current first quarter than the council had projected. He added that the council might well revise upward its forecast for the year as a whole, although not right away. The recent improvement in ORLANDO, Fla., March 4—Ronald Reagan charged today in his most direct attack on President Ford, that the President had failed to provide the United States with vision and leadership and that under his tenure the nation had fallen militarily behind the Soviet Union.

Expressing a "deep concern" over national security that went "beyond politics," the former Governor of California said that the President and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger "must be held accountable to history" for permitting the United States to slip behind the Russians in military power.
The explicit attack on the President marked a departure from Mr. Reagan's often-stated position that the Republican primary was an opportunity for the discussion of issues, but not personalities.
The remarks, made in a prepared statement given out at a news conference held on Mr. Reagan's return to Florida to make a final four-day push for votes in Tuesday's primary, indicated that the hawks among

GULF ASKS RETURN OF ILLEGAL GIFTS

Letters Sent to Politicians in an Effort to Retrieve Some of $12.3 Million

By The Associated Press
PITTSBURGH, March 4—The Gulf Oil Corporation said today that it had asked politicians who accepted its illegal campaign contributions to return the money.
A spokesman for the company said its board of directors felt a responsibility to Gulf stockholders to try to recover some of the $12.3 million given to politicians in the United States and abroad over a 14-year period.
He said names of the elected officials being asked to return contributions could be found in the McCloy report, the internal investigation that chronicled how Gulf's political contribution system had worked since it began in 1959. The report was received by Gulf's board of directors in December.
Money Flow Traced
The report, named for John J. McCloy, the New York lawyer who headed the investigating committee, concluded that Gulf had "laundered" millions of dollars through a dummy subsidiary in the Bahamas and had returned the money in cash to company officials, who then gave it to politicians.
[Mr. McCloy has deplored as unfair and hypocritical the failure of the United States Government to prosecute or even condemn American politicians who have received illegal political contributions from corporations. Page 39.]
The McCloy report resulted in the ouster of Bob R. Dorsey as Gulf's chairman and of three other executives.

Conferees Agree on Bill To Tap 3 Navy Oil Fields

By EDWARD COWAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 4—House and Senate conferees reached agreement today on a bill authorizing full-scale oil production at three of four petroleum reserves, including Teapot Dome in Wyoming.
The bill is expected to lead to the production of at least 250,000 barrels a day of crude oil from Reserve No. 1, at Elk Hills in California, and possibly 20,000 barrels a day from No. 3, at Teapot Dome.
The corrupt sale of leases on those properties resulted in the Teapot Dome scandal, which rocked the Harding Administration in the early 1920's and sent the Secretary of the Interior, Albert B. Fall, to prison after his conviction in 1929.
The Navy would retain jurisdiction over these reserves and Buena Vista in California.
Buena Vista has been leased to several companies and is producing about 4,000 barrels a day, a level the Navy regards as its maximum.
The fourth and largest of the reserves, in Alaska, is poten-

PAN AM INDICTED IN BOSTON CRASH

Pleads No Contest to First Such Criminal Charge

By MAX H. SEIGEL
In the first criminal indictment of an airline stemming from a crash, Pan American World Airways was charged by a Federal grand jury yesterday with criminal negligence that contributed to the crash of one of its cargo planes at Boston's Logan Airport on Nov. 3, 1972. The plane's three-man crew was killed.
Also indicted on criminal charges were four other corporations and one individual.
Pan American entered a plea of no contest to the charges. Three of the other corporations pleaded guilty or no contest, while the fourth, Santini Brothers Inc., and one of its supervisory employees, William Higgins, entered pleas of no guilty.
A study by the National Transportation Safety Board found that the 707, which was carrying a cargo of 15,000 pounds of corrosive and volatile chemicals, had crashed because of dense smoke in the cockpit that prevented the flight crew from functioning effectively. It added that the smoke had probably been caused by leaking nitric acid, improperly packaged and stored.
"A contributing factor," the board said, "was the general lack of compliance with existing regulations governing the transportation of hazardous materials."

to free the police chief, and their anger led to several slugging matches with the police. The rioters reportedly burned 13 tax collectors' offices in the area, pillaged an agricultural credit bank, bombed a highway toll station, stopped railroad traffic with barricades and bombed a local television and communications relay center.

As a result, it appeared that there might be no television for as much as a year for the one million people in the areas of Perpignan to the south and Montpellier to the northeast.
The fatal clash erupted today in early afternoon when about a thousand winegrowers assembled near a railroad bridge over the Hérault River a few miles outside of Carcassonne, stopped a freight train arriving from Narbonne and set fire to three cars.
According to the Interior Ministry, riot policemen rushed up to stop them, using tear gas, and a gun battle ensued, with the rioters using carbines and rifles and the police, sub-machine guns. The winegrowers then reportedly retreated.

Some Mild Banter Eases Pomp at Soviet Congress

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, March 4—The 25th Communist Party Congress, expected to wind up tomorrow, has been distinguished more by proletarian pomp than any spontaneity. So far, it has followed the scenario. Yet a few informal touches have intruded, not the least from the party's leader, Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Mr. Brezhnev, who has displayed a vigor that tended to dampen speculation abroad about his health, has engaged in some banter during the sessions that was more characteristic of the man he replaced, Nikita S. Khrushchev.

Perhaps the brightest exchange occurred during the speech by the new president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, Anatoly P. Aleksandrov. In reviewing the achievements of Soviet science, Dr. Aleksandrov reported that nuclear technology was being widely used for diagnosing and treating diseases.

"Some kind of 'atomic bomb' against the flu," said Mr. Brezhnev from his seat. "Against the flu? Leonid Ilyich, I can reply immediately," responded the physicist and explained that an institute in Leningrad has developed a flu vaccine. "It just has to be a little cheaper," Dr. Aleksandrov added, to laughter from the delegates.

Republic and regional party secretaries speaking at the congress have been thanking Moscow for economic help given them in the past, but Eduard A. Shevardnadze, the Georgian party chief, took the gesture one step further. He prompted a stir by expressing thanks for the help that his caucasian republic expected in the future. "We praise the comrades in advance," Mr. Shevardnadze explained, "so they are satisfied and the issues get solved easier."

Prominent among the economic problems being discussed at the congress is the low growth of consumer goods production. The delegates were reminded of the problem again last week when some Young Pioneers—the Communist version of the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts—showed up to sing some songs that included a doggerel pitch for more sports gear.

"The demand for socks and shinglers for socks and grows faster with each day. Could our equipment problem be solved with a little less delay?"

Communist reporters have been allowed into the Kremlin to attend the formal sessions, but non-Communist reporters can get no closer than a Soviet press center in the downtown Intourist Hotel. The same third-floor press service was used for the Apollo-Soyuz mission last July, when journalists gathered to watch the Soyuz spaceship blast off on television from the Soviet launch pad 1,400 miles away. The Kremlin is less than a half

Wife of Mao Appears to Play Key Role in Ideological Drive

The Globe and Mail, Toronto

PEKING, Friday, March 5—Chiang Ching, the wife of Chairman Mao Tse-tung and a leading radical force in China's Cultural Revolution of 1966 to 69, appears to be playing a key role in the current struggle against "capitalist roaders."

The latest and strongest indication of her role was yesterday's issue of the Communist party newspaper, Jenmin Jih Pao, which contained five articles written by or about cultural groups with which she is closely identified.

The most prominent article contains an attack on Deputy Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-ping—as usual without naming him—for insulting revolutionary Peking operas, an art form fostered by Miss Chiang herself since the Cultural Revolution.

Mr. Teng not only refused to attend performances of the revolutionary operas, according to the article, but he also remarked that the performances were never sell-outs. "What's all this except slanders and rumors without facts?" the article asks.

Mr. Teng apparently walked out in the middle of the film "Spring Seedling," an epic about barefoot doctors, remarking as he departed that the film was "ultra-leftist."

The article sharing the front page describes "the revolution-

Crime-Against-Women Parley Opens in Brussels Without Men

Special to The New York Times

BRUSSELS, March 4—An international Tribunal on Crimes against Women opened in Brussels today, with no men allowed.

The five-day conference, bringing together more than 1,000 women from 28 countries, is considered by its organizers as a radical feminist answer to what they regard as establishment-oriented meetings held during the 1975 Women's Year, especially the United Nations conference in Mexico City.

The tone was set in an opening message to the tribunal from the French author Simone de Beauvoir, who was not present. She called the tribunal a "great historical event."

"In Mexico City," she said, "women, mandated by parties and nations, sought only to integrate women into masculine society; you are meeting to denounce the oppression that women suffer."

Immediately after the opening of the conference about 30 male journalists present were asked to leave the hall. Women journalists were allowed to stay if they signed up as delegates and paid the $3.75 admission fee.

A Belgian delegate, Lily Boeykens, said that the policy was adopted because some of the women would find it difficult to testify on sensitive subjects such as rape and abortion in front of men.

"Any conference has a right to meet behind closed doors," she added. "We want to speak with and for women about crimes committed against them."

The organizers say that the policy is important since they hope to develop a spontaneity in the sessions that was lacking in more official functions.

During the first-day discussion on abortion, reports on the situation in various countries were given and then the floor was open to personal testimony. Subjects slated for discussion later include wife-beating, forced motherhood, rape and prostitution.

Male journalists will get a daily briefing and be admitted to the closing session.

MOSCOW CONGRESS VOTING ON LEADERS

MOSCOW, March 4 (UPI)—Top Soviet Communists met today in a closed session to choose a leadership. Few changes were expected in the hierarchy.

The names of the new Central Committee and Politburo will be announced tomorrow at the closing session of the Soviet party's 25th Congress.

A total news blackout was imposed on the proceedings in the Kremlin except for a brief acknowledgment by the official press agency. That "the Congress took up the next item on its agenda—elections of central party bodies."

Leaders of the East European nations were also believed to be meeting today, although no Soviet official could, or would, confirm the widely reported session.

There was speculation the Central Committee would be expanded from the 241 members chosen at the last congress in 1971.

The procedure then called for approval of the committee by the full Congress, followed by committee nomination in secret session of a Politburo—the cabinet-sized body that effectively rules the Soviet Union.

South Africa Seems Cool Rhodesians in Crisis

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times

PRIME Minister John Vorster of South Africa gave encouragement today to a statement on the closing of its borders with this landlocked Rhodesia. Vorster said the Mozambique actions could cause "an escalation to something much more serious." Because the imposition of United Nations sanctions and their steady violation have made the economy of Rhodesia a matter of state secrecy, it is difficult to assess the exact magnitude of the blow inflicted by Mozambique. The amount of transit traffic moving through that country is secret. The Rhodesia Herald, which cannot risk offending the stern Government of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith, said this morning that the two rail lines to the Mozambican ports of Maputo (the former Lourenço Marques) and Beira carried less than 15 per cent of Rhodesian imports and exports.

The figure is believed by informed sources to be a serious understatement. Before the Portuguese coup in 1974, more than three-quarters of Rhodesian traffic was routed through the colony of Mozambique. A major effort of rerouting through South Africa began then but is not believed to have reduced the Mozambique flow to 15 per cent. Most of the gasoline and other petroleum products needed by Rhodesia were reliably reported to have moved through Maputo.

Aid to Mozambique Weighed

LONDON, March 4—Britain and her 35 Commonwealth partners discussed here today how best to help Mozambique so that it would not lose financially by the imposing of United Nations sanctions on Rhodesia. It will not be military aid, a senior Commonwealth official said.

Life in Lagos Slowly Returning to Chaotic Normal

By JOHN DARTNOM
Special to The New York Times

LAGOS, Nigeria, March 4—An American visitor stepped into a taxi here the other day and was inching through teeming back streets when suddenly her cab was engulfed by an angry mob. The crowd jeered and pumiled the car. She was trapped, she thought, in an antiwhite demonstration. Then someone in the mob yanked open the front door and pulled out the driver. He had not paid his union dues and had blundered into enforcers. Two and a half weeks after the army uprising that killed Gen. Murtala Muhammed, life is slowly returning to normal in Lagos; or what passes for normal, in the most rambunctious and unpredictable capital in West Africa.

with soldiers, their automatic weapons trained on pedestrians. Behind comes a Mercedes and, through the darkened window, a glimpse of a peaked military hat. In the Ikoyi Club, a private facility with the vestiges of colonialism in its polished brass and deep mahogany, foreigners no longer tell stories of being told to "go home" by Nigerians. Among Nigerians, gossipers have tired of guessing the whereabouts of Lieut. Col. B. S. Dimka, the missing man whom the Government has charged with masterminding the plot. It has returned to traditional topics: the rising cost of pineapple, the latest scandal and the family next door.

work at 10 A.M. Market women, who used to sit by flickering candlelight at roadside stands stacked with kola nuts, sardine packets, cigarettes and tape cassettes, close early. Nightspots for highlife and juju music, like the new Can Can on Custom Street, are suffering heavy losses but the red-dressed women who frequent them are not. They commute in lifeboats to the outer harbor, where 250 freighters are at anchor with millions of tons of backlogged cement and stranded sailors. In the morning, they return, laden with scarves and liquor. Recently, curfew passes have appeared. They are intended for "necessary operating personnel." But with copying machines humming busily, their number is mysteriously growing.

immediate steps to alleviate the traffic. One step was to post soldiers to direct traffic at major intersections. A driver who bolts in front of onrushing traffic to drive on the opposite shoulder is apt to be yanked out of his vehicle and whipped. The flow has improved. There are those who say that it has gotten worse again with General Muhammed's death. The new Government is taking stern measures to stamp out "rumor mongering." Last week the export manager of a London-based battery company was taken into court to face a charge of "spreading false rumors." He was released on $5,000 bail and left court shielding his face from photographers. Much of what he was charged with having said sounded like loose bar talk. But in a country where memories of tribal massacres and civil war are vivid, that kind of talk is regarded as sedition. "Let's face it," said one Nigerian businessman. "In times of crisis, there is always the fear of reversion. Our history is so short. It is amazing that things are as calm as they are."

Kissinger Warns Cubans to Act With Caution in Africa

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger appearing yesterday before the House panel on international relations.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger appearing yesterday before the House panel on international relations.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger today warned that current negotiations between the Rhodesian Government and leaders of the country's black majority represented "perhaps the last opportunity for a peaceful result." Mr. Kissinger had been invited by the House committee to testify on the results of his tour of six Latin-American countries last month. In a prepared statement, he said that all of his hosts on that tour had in mind "the extent to which Cuba's action in Angola may constitute an ominous precedent for intervention in this hemisphere."

and guerrilla activities against the American-administered Canal Zone are also possibilities, he said. "It is a problem of the whole Western Hemisphere," he went on. "But we are not going to be blackmailed into an agreement contrary to our vital interests."

Britain Doubts Cuban Moves
LONDON, March 4—The Foreign Office said tonight that it had no knowledge of any moves of Cuban forces in Angola into the Rhodesian dispute. A British official said that Mr. Kissinger's remarks simply echoed widely held fears and did not necessarily indicate foreknowledge of new moves by the Cubans.

JERUSALEM, March 4 (Reuters)—Israel's Central Bureau of Statistics says that the average annual income of Israeli Arab families is now larger than that of Eastern Jewish families—those that came to Israel from non-Western countries.

Britain's Commissioner In Nigeria Withdrawn

LONDON, March 4 (Reuters)—Britain today withdrew its representative, High Commissioner, Sir Martin le Quesne, from Lagos because of his "personal unacceptability" to the Nigerians, the Foreign Office here said in a statement. While the move today does not mean a diplomatic break, relations between Britain and Nigeria have been cool since Feb. 13, when an overthrow of the Government was attempted in Lagos.

House Appropriates $5.39 Billion for Aid

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—The House tonight passed by a vote of 214 to 152 a $5.39 billion foreign aid appropriation bill with a rider that opponents said could cut off Israel, Egypt and many other countries from receiving its benefits. The appropriation bill contains nearly all of President Ford's recommended package of more than $3 billion in special Middle East funds, designed to foster peace in that area.

on any payment of principal or interest on a debt to the United States. Debts disputed by the debtor country would not count. However, the main handlers of the bill warned the House that if the provision remained in the bill it would preclude Israel, Egypt and many other countries from receiving any of the funds. Funds provided by earlier appropriations would not be affected. If the Senate, which now gets the measure, does not agree with the amendment, the provision could be removed in conference.

reporters: "It will be deleted in conference. It just can't be made to work. It was an emotional thing at the end of a long day. It was a good thing to demagogue on." Bill Alexander, Democrat of Arkansas, who offered the amendment, said constituents did not understand why the United States did not pursue collection of its foreign debts as the Internal Revenue Service pressed collections from citizens. "We have a double standard for foreign countries," he said. Many of the delinquents, he added, are oil-producing countries that have made big profits since the world price of petroleum skyrocketed.

Renews U.N. Effort for Political Prisoners

WASHINGTON, March 4—The United States today renewed its support for a world amnesty for political prisoners. The United States representative, Daniel P. Moynihan, called on the General Assembly to adopt a resolution to provide additional amnesty for all political prisoners. The United States withdrew its draft when it was compromised by amendments voted on.

States is asking the United Nations Human Rights Commission to appeal on humanitarian grounds to all governments to give serious and continuing consideration to the grant of amnesty to political prisoners. The proposal submitted today by Leonard Garment, the United States delegate to the 32-nation commission, is much briefer and simpler than the one offered to the General Assembly. Mr. Garment announced that Britain, West Germany, Austria and Italy would co-sponsor it. However, with time lost because of an eight-day strike by the United Nations staff here

Anguilla in New Phase As Elections Approach

By RALPH BLUMENTHAL
Special to The New York Times

THE VALLEY, Anguilla, — "The revolution is over," Ronald Webster said. "We revolted for separate status and our own constitution and we have achieved it. Now we are looking forward to development."

Nearly seven years to the day after this scrubby island 160 miles east of Puerto Rico capped its "revolution" with a declaration of independence from its sister islands of St. Kitts and Nevis, Anguilla and its popular leader, Mr. Webster, have begun a new phase in the island's somewhat zany recent history.

On Feb. 10, at the behest of Anguilla's seven-member ruling council, the British Government put forth a new Constitution for the island, establishing it as a British dependency and officially separating it from St. Kitts and Nevis.

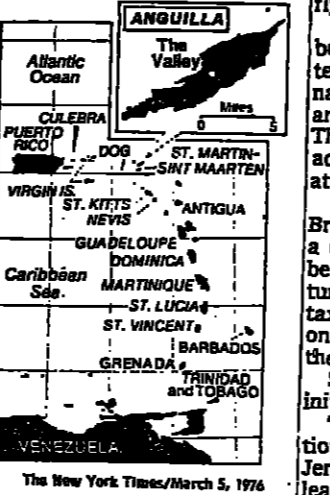

The three islands, former British colonies, in 1967 were made a single, self-governing associated state of the United Kingdom.

Long-standing resentment over their treatment by dominant St. Kitts led Anguilla's more than 6,000 people to rebel for the first time on March 30, 1967. This set off a series of events that culminated two years later in a comic-opera invasion by more than 200 British paratroopers and Scotland Yard policemen.

The Anguillians welcomed the British, who ended up pretty much ruling the island until the present in consultation with the elected Anguilla council headed by Mr. Webster.

The new charter gives the British Commissioner here, David F. B. Le Breton, basic authority over Anguilla's foreign affairs, defense, the police and civil service. Other functions are to be exercised by a new seven-member House of Assembly, to be elected March 15.

The campaign for the seats has already begun to stir this low-lying island sprinkled with brightly painted concrete block houses. There is no real capital. The center of this 16-mile-long and 3-mile-wide island is called simply "the Valley." "Everything here is kind of spread out—there's not like a town here or anything," said a taxi driver, Bob Rogers.

The 49-year-old Mr. Webster is fielding a full slate with six fellow candidates of his Progressive People's Party. Challenging him are as many as 15 other candidates still too independent to be considered an organized opposition.

"We're quite happy with what we've received," Mr. Webster said. "We've been reaching for a long time for a closer affiliation," he added. "She has accepted us not as a colony but as a partner of hers." By "she," Mr. Webster meant Britain.

Mr. Webster, a slight man with deep-set dark eyes, added that "our main concern is development."

Anguilla seriously needs economic stimulation. The main exports are lobsters, which earned about $200,000 last year, and salt from evaporated sea water, which brought in about $130,000.

17 SEOUL CRITICS SAID TO BE HELD

Signers of Anti-Park Paper Are Reported Questioned

SEOUL, South Korea, March 4—The wife of a former South Korean president, Mrs. Yun Po Sun, and 16 other Christians were reportedly being held today in connection with a statement that some of them signed Monday, asking that President Park Chung Hee step down.

Sources close to the dissidents said today that 17 Christians, including five Roman Catholic priests, had been taken from their homes by security agents for questioning.

Persons reported held in addition to Mrs. Yun included Ham Sok Hon, a writer and critic of the Government, and the Rev. Yun Ban Ung, a Protestant minister who is active in the activity here of Amnesty International.

The crackdown began Monday when a group of 12 political dissidents signed and publicly read a statement accusing the Government. The statement asked President Park to free all political prisoners, restore full democratic rights and correct his economic policies.

The declaration was signed by former President Yun and by Kim Dae Jung, who is one of President Park's chief political foes.

Lee Oo Chung, a civil rights leader, led the declaration to 300 persons gathered for a mass held at Myongdong Cathedral in Seoul. She is also reported under questioning.

Under a state of emergency declared last May, criticism of the Government or the Constitution under which curbing of

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., March 4—The world's population, 3.99 billion in mid-1974, would double by the year 2010 if the latest growth rate of 1.9 percent annually was maintained, the United Nations reported today.

Data issued by the world organization's Statistical Bureau showed that the population in many developing countries was increasing much more rapidly than in the industrial nations.

Africa and Latin America were found to have the highest population growth rate among all of the world's regions—2.7 percent each.

Annual growth rate figures for other regions were: North America—0.9 percent; Asia—2.1 percent; Europe—0.6 percent; Oceania—2.0 percent.

According to the statistics, the United States population is now growing 0.8 percent a year. Soviet population is growing by 0.9 percent, and China's population by 1.7 percent.

In the latest volume of the United Nations Demographic Yearbook, released today, contained the data.

The yearbook's also indicated that more frequent in any States than in any try for which figures are available. The American rate was estimated at 4.19 in 1974.

Comparative figures for divorces for every 1,000 marriages in 1974 in France and 1.5 in the Soviet Union. No divorce figures for China.

Tables on "Legal Abortions, 1968-71" showed steep increases in the United States in 1970 and 1980. No data were given for 1975. Figures for 1975 were supplied by countries in Europe.

Western Europe continued to report rates for infant in excess of 15 per 1,000 live births. States ranked 177th in mortality statistics of 16.5 in 1974.

Jeremiah Gumbs, who is a leading independent candidate for the new House and operator of the island's only substantial tourist resort, the 20-room Rendezvous Bay Beach Hotel.

"We need a relationship with Britain—yes," he said, "but not necessarily a dependent one."

Independence Loss Feared

"The British Government has nothing to offer us," said Hubert Hughes, another independent candidate, maintaining that the island was in danger of losing its independence all over again, this time to Britain.

Mr. Webster maintained that he had actually tricked the British into invading Anguilla by bringing to the island in 1969 a mysterious American, Jack Holcomb, and having the word spread that he was an underworld figure. Mr. Holcomb was escorted off the island by Scotland Yard men.

Although Mr. Webster himself seems to be the chief campaign issue so far, another has been emerging.

This is whether the United States Defense Department will be able to lease Dog Island, 11 miles northwest of Anguilla, for artillery practice. It would replace Culebra, off Puerto Rico, which was recently given up in response to long-standing complaints of residents.

Fishermen who ply the surrounding waters in search of lobsters have been incensed by the proposal. Mr. Gumbs, who owns Dog Island, says he has decided to lease it to the Americans in exchange for substantial benefits to Anguilla. The United States will build a power plant on Anguilla, he says, and aid in desalting and other projects for privileges at Dog Island.

BOMBED TOWN

Foreign Envoys

by U.S. Planes

By The New York Times
K. Thailand, March 4 (AP) — Cambodia reported today that a foreign diplomatic tour of the north-Cambodian town that was bombed by American planes last week. The United States has denied and Western diplomats who follow Cambodia believe the damage was done by Cambodian saboteurs. Phnom Penh radio said that diplomats from 12 nations and a representative of the National Liberation Front saw three bomb craters in the town of Siem Reap. Diplomats from North Vietnam, Cuba and the P.L.O. reportedly said they were "as having de-U.S. imperialists." They denounced U.S. actions. United States was denounced by all the diplomats. Radio quoted Cambodia's Ambassador to Phnom Penh as having said only that the action in Siem Reap was reminiscent of what he had seen during World War II in the Philippines. He said he would try to reach Mr. Bjork, a member of the party for direct action, but he has been unsuccessful.

New Approach Is Urged In Teaching of Theology

By KENNETH A. BRIGGS

The country's top independent theological schools should intensify study of specific religious traditions and downgrade general approaches to religion, a newly released Rockefeller Foundation report says. It is the first report of its kind ever to be prepared by the Foundation.

In an analysis of seven seminaries with university affiliation but no formal church ties, the report concludes that the schools have lost much of their theological focus by eliminating required courses and promoting practical skills to the detriment of classical theological education.

This situation has led to a growing detachment from churches that have looked to the graduates of these schools for leadership in the past and heightened confusion about the purposes the seminaries should serve.

Among the report's chief recommendations to remedy the situation is more in-depth study of particular traditions such as Protestantism, Roman Catholicism and Judaism in a context of increased pluralism.

Other suggestions are that theological students receive a core curriculum, and that their work concentrate on scholarly rather than practical subjects. Saying that the schools now often produce graduates with a "smattering of many skills and a mastery of none," the report asserts that "the work should be unashamedly academic, unmistakably particularistic and, in this post-Protestant and increasingly post-Christian era of American religious history, genuinely pluralistic whenever this is feasible."

Work on the 67-page report was started by Prof. George Lindbeck, a Yale theologian, in 1973 with the assistance of two Harvard professors, Karl W. Deutsch, a political scientist, and Nathan Glazer, a sociologist. The cost was $35,000.

Included in the study were the divinity schools of Yale, Harvard, Vanderbilt and Chicago as well as Union Theological Seminary (related to Columbia), the Graduate Theological Union of Berkeley and the theology department of Notre Dame University.

These schools have gained eminence by their long history of educating ministers, denominational officers and teachers and by their association with prestigious universities.

Church Schools Improved
 In modern times, the university relationship has often been strained as a secular, scientific outlook has challenged the legitimacy of faith related studies.

At the same time, the churches have steadily improved the quality of their own theological schools. While churches are tempted to regard the independent university seminaries as "competitive with their own," the report notes, "universities might see them as dispensable anachronisms."

The study identifies three factors that have allegedly accounted for a reduced status for theological studies in the seminaries:

1. The proliferation of the objective study of religion as separate from divinity schools.
 2. An ecumenical climate that dilutes historic faith traditions.

 3. A cluster of cultural conditions that have weakened religion as an influence.

The report calls the burgeoning of religious study programs, which approach religion comparatively and from a detached point of view, "phenomenal" since World War II and the "greatest structural alteration" in American higher education's treatment of religion in 150 years.

Requirements in church history, the Bible and theology have been drastically reduced or eliminated gradually over the last 50 years, the report says. In response to the demand for courses in such areas as psychology, social problems and community organizing, the seminaries have generated a supplemental curriculum with a practical emphasis.

Further, the study says many students have enrolled not to acquire a theological foundation to serve organized religion, but to search for personal meaning and vocational direction.

Graduate Study Provided
 For the majority of students, the nondenominational schools "provide a good post-B.A. general education for those interested in a diffuse variety of religious studies," the report says.

Since the 1950's, the percentage of students from the seminaries who have entered church occupations has dropped from 80 percent to 50 percent or under. "For a fair number," the report says, "divinity school represents the last serious involvement with organized religion."

The schools still produce a high percentage of doctoral graduates for university teaching positions.

One means of combating what the report considers a drift toward an amorphous theological identity is by ramping the curriculum to allow for options for serious academic concentration on particular traditions.

Such a plan would, in the study's proposals, include traditions that have been underplayed, such as Judaism or absent in serious forms, such as Buddhism and Islam.

The most difficult challenge, the report says, may be to widen the liberal Protestant base of the schools to make room for conservative evangelicals who are in tension with liberalism.

SENATOR BELLMON RETAINS HIS SEAT

Colleagues Back Republican in Disputed Oklahoma Race

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—The Senate voted unanimously today to seat Senator Henry Bellmon, a Republican, after narrowly passing a motion to postpone indefinitely action on a resolution ordering a new election in the disputed 1974 United States Senate race in Oklahoma.

The decision ended a 16-month dispute over the contested election that was fought in Oklahoma state courts, the Senate Rules Committee, and the full Senate by Mr. Bellmon, the incumbent, and his Democratic opponent, former Representative Ed Edmondson.

After three days of debate, the Senate voted 47 to 46 to put aside a resolution that would have declared the Senate unable to determine a winner and required a special election in Oklahoma. The outcome of the Senate action was in doubt until the final seconds when the last votes were cast.

Mr. Bellmon won the support of his 37 Republican colleagues and nine Democrats.

Mr. Edmondson based his case on voting irregularities in one of the state's 77 counties. He said the irregularities had violated state law and had cost him the election.

Mr. Bellmon won by 3,835 votes in his race for a second term.

Mr. Edmondson received more votes than Mr. Bellmon in the 76 counties where he did not contest the results, but it was insufficient to overcome Mr. Bellmon's 22,370-vote margin in Tulsa County.

Mr. Edmondson argued that a new election should have been held because the 640 voting machines used in the county had not carried special levers to allow straight party voting, as required by state law.

He said that 545 of the machines had carried instructions misleading voters as to how to use the absent lever.

He asserted that state law had also been violated because candidates for the United States Senate had been listed on the ballot below candidates for state offices.

The Oklahoma Supreme Court, made up of eight Democrats and one Republican, voted unanimously to uphold a lower court ruling that Mr. Bellmon should be seated, prompting Mr. Edmondson's appeal to the Senate.

Mr. Bellmon said in a state-

Three Grain Companies Fined in T

By WILLIAM ROBBINS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 4—A Federal grand jury in New Orleans indicted two large corporations and an affiliated company today on charges of systematic thefts and misgrading of grain.

Shortly afterward, the three companies were found guilty after pleading no contest in Federal District Court there.

The two corporations are the Archer-Daniels-Midland Company, Decatur, Ill., one of the country's leading grain corporations, the stock of which is listed on the New York Stock Exchange, and the Garant Grain Company, New York, another large but privately held concern said to be owned primarily by Swiss interests.

They were indicted along with the St. Charles Grain Elevator Company, which is jointly owned by the other two and which operates a grain elevator for them upriver from New Orleans.

Federal Judge Edward J. Boyle Sr. imposed the maximum fine of $10,000 against each company. According to reporters in the New Orleans courtroom, he said that the evidence supported a finding of guilty and added that if he had the "prerogative" of giving a stiffer sentence, he "certainly would impose it."

The chief prosecution witness was Robert J. Isakson, a Federal Bureau of Investigation agent, who testified that grain shortweighting was "a very standard practice at the elevator."

He estimated that the shortweighting had produced more than $400,000 a year and the misgrading about $1.2 million annually in extra profits for the three companies.

Cornelius F. Heusel, first assistant United States Attorney, said that the Government had no evidence that any officers or directors of the companies had "willfully and knowingly" participated in the activities described in the indictment, but noted that the investigation was continuing.

Today's indictment charged the companies with conspiracy to defraud by systematic thefts through shortweighting of grain destined for foreign shipments and with using a sophisticated device to deceive grain inspectors and put misgraded, low-quality grain aboard ships.

Investigation Is Continuing
 The new indictment was technically a superseding one that revised another that was returned last August and added the names of the parent companies. It also substituted the name of the St. Charles Grain Elevator Company for that of another joint venture, Adnac Inc., which was named in the original indictment along with the elevator manager and five junior officials. All six have since pleaded guilty.

Adnac Inc. is the owner of the elevator property and leases it to St. Charles, the operating company.

Four corporations have now been indicted in a continuing Federal inquiry into corruption in the grain industry. Last summer the Bunge Corporation, New York, was indicted on theft-conspiracy charges and fined after pleading no contest.

Sixty-two individuals and corporations have thus far been indicted in the investigation, which began in New Orleans and has spread to ports.

The indictment held that the conspirators manipulated by ostensibly going to the elevator as we tion of tape reco the amount of grad ed.

It also charged a switch had been used and close ship taining low-quality to circumvent a sampling device at detection of the g grain.

Additional Remarks on Japan's Fishing Industry

Last October 24, this newspaper carried our editorial advertisement entitled "4 Billion, 7 Billion," outlining the Association's position on the utilization of marine resources. In response, we have received a flood of letters from readers expressing a wide range of opinions. Some of these contained certain misconceptions of our position while others alleged Japan was over-fishing the seas. Accordingly, we feel it necessary to restate our views on Japan's fishing industry today and its policy toward the future.

It is well-known that Japan throughout its long history has depended upon the sea for a major portion of its food supply and has made effective use of several hundred species of fish and shellfish. This would not have been possible if Japan had ignored the necessity of conserving these resources. Over the past half century, Japan has consistently maintained an average annual catch of from three to four million metric tons in the waters off its coast. It stands to reason that if the Japanese Government had chosen not to enforce effective regulations on its fishing industry, including strict limits on fishing intensity, but rather had allowed its fishermen to overfish at will, such a high catch level could not have been maintained over so long a time.

Our efforts at conserving marine resources extend to the international level as well. We seek to cooperate with all nations concerned in this endeavor. Over a decade ago, worldwide concern arose over the excessive fishing activities of the tuna fishing industry. Thus, in 1967 Japan called for a cutback in the overall tuna catch. Although this appeal went largely unheeded except among scientists, Japan voluntarily restricted the size of its tuna fishing fleet to a level below that it had set for itself some ten years earlier.

In a different but equally important area, Japan has made significant contributions to the development of techniques for propagating salmon, shrimp, sea bream and other species of marine life. The Government is giving positive support to the effort to move from "fish catching to fish farming" so that someday Japan may be a nation of "fish farmers" as well. Our advanced technology and extensive experience in fish breeding is helping many countries of the world to develop their own fishing industries and this effort will continue.

In the event that the concept of Economic Zones, by which a nation exercises jurisdiction over the sea's resources up to 200 nautical miles from its coast, comes to be established globally, 30 to 50 percent of the high seas now open to all nations on an equal basis would come under the authority of one nation or another, with the result that 90 percent of the world's principal fishing grounds would be fenced off.

In this context, we firmly believe the utmost consideration and care must be given to avoid any arrangement which would obstruct mankind's fair use of marine resources, deprive countries long dependent upon these resources from using them as their food supply base, or close the door on the future development of the fishing industry by countries other than those blessed with abundant land and natural resources.

The next session of the U.N. Conference on the Law of the Sea will meet in New York in March. As the Conference moves to establish an equitable and just rule by which mankind can benefit, we urge a thorough discussion of all aspects involved in this historic change.

For information on the fisheries industry in Japan, please contact us at the address below. Also we would like to hear your opinions on the above.

CITY CAUCUS'S STARR QUIT

Housing Chief's Plan for Areas 'Racist'

City Council's six-member Puerto Rican Caucus called yesterday the resignation of Housing and Rent Administrator, for the "planned shrink-low-income and min-up communities."

Mr. Starr, who advanced the plan as his own idea, had an acceleration of population in slum areas as a result of citywide cuts dictated by the Mayor Beame, who yesterday disassociated himself from the plan, nor Mr. Starr would comment on the demand. On Tuesday, he said he had no intention of dismissing Mr. Starr, adding that he would not "gag my commission."

Are Democrats

Our black members of the caucus, all Democrats, are E. Samuel of Manhattan, Samuel D. Wright and Robert of Brooklyn. The Puerto Rican members, Democrats, are Ramon S. of the Bronx and Luis of Brooklyn.

Samuel, chairman of the caucus, said the proposed plan was "genocidal, racist, and irresponsible." He described Mr. Starr's plan as "ugly" and "vicious" and that instead of "rehabilitating and saving neighborhoods from being left to their own devices" it would leave them to their own devices.

He said that as a result of the plan, Mr. Starr's commission has been a great source of disgust and outrage in the communities.

Although Mr. Starr had spoken of planned shrinkage in the Bronx and Brown-Caucus caucus contended that the concept was not a concept of geography and that it was an assault on one of the communities.

Rejects Ford Plea

INGTON, March 4 (AP) — Sen. Ford's request for a postponement of his spending on juvenile delinquency programs was rejected today by the House. The vote was 287-117, a margin of disapproval that killed Ford's proposal to delay the authorized funds.

"As always, the acting is superlative. Gazzara's Cosmo catches all the paradoxes and puzzles of the character, the wired ambition and the rapture over doom. Cassavetes' hoodlums, notably Seymour Cassel, are all unfailingly polite. The one exception is Timothy Carey as a fang-toothed, philosophical hood who eats dinner wearing white gloves and likes to quote the great thinkers. Cassel is curious about why Carey declines to fulfill his assignment and kill Gazzara. Carey curls his lips over his gums, lets a little foam drip, and says, 'Like Karl Marx said: opium is the religion of the people.' From him, that is sufficient explanation. No one would dare ask further questions."

Jargon, a Small Press, Is One Poet's Way of Helping Other Poets

By THOMAS LASK
 Jonathan Williams, a tall, bald, bearded, 46-year-old North Carolinian, is also a poet, book designer and hiker extraordinaire.

Jonathan Williams

Mr. Williams took them both at their word. The first Jargon was a single folded sheet, text by Mr. Williams, illustration by David Ruff. Jargon 2 had a poem by Joel Oppenheimer and illustration by Robert Rauschenberg. Eighty-two titles followed, much more substantial in content and bulk.

More Substantial in Bulk
 Jargon grew out of the teaching of Charles Olson at Black Mountain College, where Mr. Williams was a student. Mr. Olson urged the poets to do the entire thing in regard to poetry, not to stop with the writing on the page. R. Buckminster Fuller, another strong influence at Black Mountain, voiced this attitude when he remarked:

"She was the girl who had everything—Money, good looks and social position. Her mother—a classic Bouvier beauty. Now they are living amongst the souvenirs of their lives..."

there and no one reads him. So I wrote him a letter and went to see him."
 — The result was Jargon 15, Louis Zukofsky's "Some Times," one of the most beautiful books Jargon has produced, Mr. Williams says.

Hand-to-Hand Selling
 His list tends to fall into two categories, forgotten poets such as Mina Loy (once coupled with Marianne Moore in reputation) and new poets (at least as they were then) such as Paul Blackburn, Robert Creeley, Robert Duncan, Mr. Olson (Jargon published Olson's first substantial book) and the Canadian poet Irving Layton. A goodly number of the "new poets" are now on their own, which is as it should be, Mr. Williams says: "The names change, but the function remains the same."

Mostly, he goes after authors whose work he has encountered or who have come to him through the suggestions of friends, mentors and literary people generally.

"A BEAUTIFULLY ACTED, TOUGH-TALKING COMEDY..."

"A very clever, smart-mouthed stunt that recalls more accurately aspects of old Hollywood than any number of other period films. Mr. Dreyfuss... gives a remarkably funny, tough and bristly performance. Although 'Inserts' has been rated X, it is not pornographic itself."
 — Vincent Canby, New York Times

"Inserts' wallows in wit, vibrates with vulgarity, possesses the magnificent had taste of the Hollywood 1930's that it depicts, and is a very moving film."
 — Norma McLean Sloop, Amer. Film

A 'Franklin and Jefferson' Package at Met

By HILTON KRAMER

With the opening today of the exhibition called "The World of Franklin and Jefferson," the Metropolitan Museum of Art has an unmistakable hit on its hands.

View of "The World of Franklin and Jefferson" show at Metropolitan Museum of Art

"The World of Franklin and Jefferson" is—need one add?—an official event of the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration.

As entertainments go, the show has a good deal to recommend it. It is glossy. It is fast-paced. It is crammed with things to look at.

The only things missing, really, are a brass band and a couple of hot-dog stands to make the atmosphere of a Fourth of July celebration complete.

The entire show is contained in a single long gallery, occupying 6,500 square feet, into which is fitted an extraordinary kaleidoscope of images, objects and words.

There are, to be sure, some real objects in the show—a volume of verse by Voltaire, somebody's clay pipe, an example of the famous Franklin fireplace and a handsome display of tools. There are even a few works of art—originals, I mean, rather than reproductions.

There is also what I expect will be the favorite item of the innumerable school children who will be marched through this show: a stuffed bison from the Field Museum in Chicago.

Governing this hodgepodge of the significant and the insignificant is an overall conception dividing the exhibition into four sections: "Friends and Acquaintances," which allows for the inclusion of portraits (reproductions, of course) of practically everyone of distinction in this period.

Toward the complexities of history and the accomplishment of art, toward the whole world of thought and significant action, the Eames office adopts an attitude of extreme simplification.

place not only for that stuffed bison but for some Indian artifacts as well.

The Eames name is, of course, one of the most illustrious in the history of modern design, and for the Eames chair designs, if for nothing else, it has earned a permanent place in our museums.

It remains, in any case, on view in New York through May 2, and will then hit the road again to be seen in Chicago, Los Angeles and Mexico City.

of Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson that we see in this slick display, but the spirit of modern advertising, which is obliged to reduce every experience and every value to an easily identifiable sign and an easily digestible slogan.

The result is visually effective, to be sure, but it is intellectually meretricious. It is, indeed, precisely the kind of Bicentennial show so many of us have dreaded—an elaborate and expensive exercise in nostalgia, rich in picturesque effects but devoid of anything resembling a serious idea.

It is certainly not an exhibition that belongs in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. It belongs in the show windows of I.B.M., which in fact provided the funds for the exhibition.

Pilobolus Dancing Its Way to Togetherness

By ANNA KISSELOFF

Everything about Pilobolus Dance Theater, which opens tonight at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, is unusual.

The freshness of Pilobolus has always been its very lack of a standard dance vocabulary. At the same time, no one would dispute that the pieces it presented could be defined as "choreography."

Not just a company, Pilobolus was a commune (its dancers lived and worked together on a Vermont farm) and this spirit—still in tune with the early 1970's—was reflected in the type of works that the men thought up and presented collectively.

Metaphor for Relationships "From the beginning, we aligned the work and the life style," said Moses Pendleton, still the driving force behind the group, which he started with Jonathan Wolken after they graduated from Dartmouth in 1971.

image—dancers "trying to break out of a cluster and then being thrown back into a job"—was typical of what was "almost a nostalgic college-days feeling of togetherness," he added.

Yet most of the program this weekend at the Brooklyn Academy will be as strong on solos and duets as on group pieces. This repertory change reflects what has happened to Pilobolus's own evolution.

Like all collectives, the troupe has had its share of tensions. In 1971, its members included Mr. Pendleton, Mr. Wolken, Robert Barnett, class of '72, and Leo Harris, '73.

The crucial turning point for Pilobolus, in Mr. Pendleton's view, came in the spring of 1974 when the all-male company was joined by the two women. Mrs. Chase literally took over Mr. Harris's part in a work called "Spyrogyra."

Growing up, Mr. Pendleton admits, is not without its hardships, and the state of Pilobolus today, he suggests, is symbolic of a new work, simply called "Untitled."

"The fact that we couldn't even find a title for our last piece," he said, "is telling." The communal life style has dissolved but Pilobolus has not. Yet given the kind of unique group Pilobolus has been until now, the idea of "using only Pilobolus's name to perform your solos can only be short-term," Mr. Pendleton asserted.

Stage: Sheldon's 'The Boss' Revived

By MEL GUSSOW

In the early 1900's Edward Sheldon was a celebrated Broadway playwright, but in recent years he has been widely neglected. As a Bicentennial tribute, the Chelsea Theater Center has sought to rectify the oversight with a production of "The Boss." This melodrama, which was first staged in 1911, opened yesterday at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

"The Boss" is made more than a theatrical curio by its concern with the changing social and industrial fabric of the United States and the richness of the title character. Watching "The Boss" one thinks less of Broadway than of Upton Sinclair and Theodore Dreiser.

Michael R. Regan is an "Irish tough" of an ex-bar-keeper who has swindled his way up. A rogue and a scoundrel, he is without taste, scruple and modesty, and it would seem, he is also without compassion. But since this is a melodrama, at the final curtain he realizes the error of his ways and earns the love of his wife and the sympathy of the audience.

Actually, "The Boss" — both play and character — has already won our vote. It is a play — and a man — that one likes in spite of its deficiencies.

Shindy Mike does everything except rob the poor-box, but he is without guile or villainy. He is less malicious than mischievous (a credit to Andrew Jarkowsky's fine performance as much as it is Mr. Sheldon's writing). His chief adversaries are the stuffy Griswolds, the father and son heads of a rival contracting concern. They deserve him.

Mike's first challenge to them — he demands daughter Emily in marriage as a price for not putting the Griswold's out of business — is also a challenge to Emily. She is a do-gooder, who spreads philanthropy in the slums without soiling her gloves or her exposure.

Married to Mike (she sells herself to save her family and, she thinks, to aid the city's poor), she has a chance to remold her husband, but her own sense of class and morality prevail. She is at least partly responsible for Mike's lion while the capitalist Griswolds are, strangely, allied with the strikers (to improve their own interests).

"The Boss" is interesting as history and as theater. Fortunately, it does not creak too much. Mr. Sheldon was a craftsman and, as director, Edward Gilbert has well-oiled the mechanism.

The director plays fair with the stage material, neither condescending to it nor laughing at it. He lets the intricate plot unravel slowly after the first act, perhaps a trifle too slowly — in Lawrence King's elegant, wood-paneled rooms. These rooms are soon filled with atmosphere and with cigar smoke. In the play, cigars are smoked, chewed, chopped and jammed into ashtrays (Mike treats cigars, we are told, as badly as he treats people).

The irony of the underdog's taking advantage of his fellow underdogs, of a supposed man-of-the-people trying to fulfill his own dreams of power, is not lost on us today. "The Boss" is a prototype not just from the business world but from crime and politics. And as Mr. Sheldon has described him — and as played by Mr. Jarkowsky — he is a colorful, garrulous cock-of-the-walk. One wonders why James Cagney never played "The Boss" in the movies.

The Cast

soon own them (he does), impetuously tweaking the cheek of his ice-cold butler, angrily wrestling an insolent labor organizer to the floor, he is a man so highly charged with the life spirit that he can neglect his own humanity. Thumbs up is his salute as he plunges again into action.

The character and the actor are of course the center of the play. Everyone else is subordinate and, at best, borders on stereotype, but there is also incisive work by Allan Frank as the elder, patrician Griswold, Gregory Abels as his overwrought son, Louise Shaffer as Emily (although she occasionally underscores her lines as if she were in musical comedy) and Igors Gavon as a forceful archbishop.

MORE RAVES FOR Salut L'Artiste

"A graceful and thought-provoking film, nominally about the hilarity, hustling, and heart-break that go into maintaining a foothold on the lower rungs of show business. Superb performances in an intelligent film co-authored and directed by Yves Robert. Actually, in a still voice, it speaks to and about all of us. What the picture shares with the very best films is a fine sense of rhythm, and that, more than anything else perhaps, is what makes a film a film. Sharply funny."

Shaw at His Best!

—Barnes, New York Times

A double cheer for the New York Shakespeare Festival for embracing the cankerous 'mammoth' and his prickly social thesis. With her glorious performance, Lynn Redgrave yanks us to attention in new appreciation of her hitherto hidden strengths.

'Shaw's drama has power, brilliance and charm, and is in exceptionally good hands. Ron Handell is excellent as Prud and Philip Bosco very impressive as Crofts!'

'A stage treat! High credit to the stellar ladies, and to director Gerald Freedman.'

'A pearl of a production.'

'Both Gordon is sly, stony and sentimental, and gets the biggest laughs of the evening.'

'Any play which includes the magnificent Ruth Gordon and the exceptionally gifted Lynn Redgrave is a great evening of theater.'

'Sharp and fresh and bright. See it!'

Caroline Kennedy was all smiles last fall when she entered Sotheby's to begin art appreciation course.

Sotheby's Class: It's Exclusive and Serious

By JUDITH WEINRAUB

Special to The New York Times
 LONDON, March 4—The most exclusive school in town these days takes up half a dozen rooms on the second floor of an unmarked commercial building off Oxford Street. There are only three teachers and 50 students. But the presence of one of them—Caroline Kennedy—has made the school the source of dinner-party conversation and widespread curiosity.

The school is Sotheby's Works of Art course, a 10-month program in the visual and decorative arts, run by the international auction house, that teaches its students to distinguish a Rembrandt from a Renoir or Ming from Meissen. For many people who enroll in the program, the ultimate aim is a job in a museum or gallery.

Inevitably, the course's new-found popularity is partly because of Caroline Kennedy. But Miss Kennedy refuses to give interviews, and Sotheby's has made it clear that its staff and students are also barred from talking about her to the press.

Despite the protection from publicity as well as the rigorous regimen of the course—five days a week from 10 A.M. until 6 P.M., with no time off for going to society weddings or getting an early start in a country weekend—Miss Kennedy's name has found its way into the gossip columns. She has been spotted at places as diverse as a country wedding in Devonshire; at Annabel's, a club in Berkeley Square that attracts landed gentry as well as pop stars; at Meridiana, a trendy Italian restaurant on fashionable Fulham Road, and at the coffee shops and sandwich bars near the museums and galleries that are "required reading" for the Sotheby's course.

"Enthusiasm is not enough," explained Derek Shrub, the director of the program. "We look for students with a real flair for objects, people who are good at analyzing what they see."

The object of the course is to broaden the visual experience and judgment of the student by establishing familiarity with paintings and objects from all artistic periods. But along the way the students can acquire something equally as important—the opportunity to meet and question practically everybody who is anybody in the art world in London.

The students divide their time between visits to museums, galleries and private collections, lectures and discussions led by their three full-time teachers, weekly classes in Italian and German, and close study of objects up for auction at Sotheby's sales.

Knowledge Is Assumed
 A working knowledge of French as well as a passing familiarity with the history of art is assumed. "We assume they know what we mean when we refer to the baroque or rococo. Otherwise they will experience great difficulty," said Mr. Shrub, an elegantly dressed fine-boned man in his 30's who once worked in the furniture department of the Victoria and Albert Museum.

And in any case, a substantial number of the students are familiar with paintings, sculpture, or art objects because they grew up with them. Mr. Shrub estimates that this year about a quarter of the students come from families who have what are discreetly described as "art collections of some quality."

Because of the high number of students from wealthy families, and because the course does not lead to any degree, it has been described as a kind of finishing school.

Challenging Work
 "It's infuriating," commented Nicole Montagu, an articulate 19-year-old student from London. "When some people hear you're doing a year at Sotheby's, they snicker and say, 'Oh, that's like doing a cooking class.' But it's really very hard, challenging work."

In addition to their formal classes, the students walk over to Sotheby's on Bond Street a few blocks away for much of their program. Each of them spends one day a week working there.

And every six weeks the class follows a major sale there. They study the items up for auction, learn the estimated prices, compare the objects to similar ones in museums and galleries, and then attend the sale.

Finally they get a chance to question the auctioneer. "They can learn all sorts of things," explained Mr. Shrub. Anything from "why one thing went for a high price and another went for a low price" to what is his special interest."

Some of the students in this year's program found that the course had some unpredictable side effects. "You're expected to be an instant expert. Ruth Freudman, a 24-year-old New Yorker whose family is in Brussels. "I'd only been here when people I was visiting to take out their silver to how much it was worth."

Others, like 23-year-old Joe found themselves attracted to art they had never known about before.

A Change in Taste
 "I grew up surrounded by said Mr. Kieffer, whose father Kieffer is a painter from Rhos. "But lately I've developed a taste about porcelain—how it looks, how it was put on."

The ultimate dream of many students in the class is of a job. Openings at Sotheby's come up often, but promising ones usually considered.

In fact, last month one of the graduates of the course, Libby became the first woman auctioneer at Sotheby's more than 200-year-old.

Sue Bond, another product of the course who is now on Sotheby's offered only one drawback to the program. "You might end up knowing too much," she said. "Some friends asked me to look at a chandelier which they thought was 17th century. Half if it was, but then the other half was made a hundred years later. I've been invited back."

An Age Difference

If there is anything that marks Miss Kennedy apart from the other students leaving the Bond Street underground station, it is not her long blonde hair and jeans, which are standard enough uniform, but rather her age. Miss Kennedy is 18, while the preferred age for the course is between 20 and 23.

The course itself is serious. It is expensive (more than $1,700 for the classes alone). And it is not designed for a dilettante from the wealthy international set who wants an easy year in London.

By ANGELA TAYLOR

Jane Pickens Langley sat in the front row at Arnold Scaasi's summer collection and tried to see through some of the couturier's magic tricks. Weren't those delicious floaty things just scarves cleverly pinned on? Couldn't she, perhaps, paint her own chiffons and save a bundle? Mrs. Langley was joking, of course, saying, "I've spent so much money here, I ought to get some free ideas."

The couturier's madly flattering ideas are what makes all those fittings and four-figure price tags worthwhile. And why the faithful braved what someone described as "English" weather—cold and damp and disastrous to hairdos—to applaud the drifting fabrics, ingenious prints and mouth-watering colors. Scaasi doesn't miss a trick to make even the woman of a certain age think she might possibly look like an ingenue again.

Suits either have tiny pleats or flutter with handkerchief points. When they're slit, they're cleverly folded in to make the best of legs. Dresses have cape sleeves or, if they are bare and held up by shoestring straps, there's one of those chiffon scarves to drape over the front and pin with a flower in back. Evening pants are as graceful as skirts and topped with loose, longish blouses. Street dresses have their own jackets or coats.

The fans loved it all. Two Mrs. Robert Sarnoffs sat cozily together on a sofa and applauded. They were brunet Anna Moffo, the current Mrs. Sarnoff, and blond Esme Hammond, who was the first of Mr. Sarnoff's three wives. Eleanor Revson, of the cosmetics clan, was near her friend Marjorie Reed, who used to work in the couture salon. Scattered around were Livia Weintraub of the flaming red hair and Gillis McGill Addison, who used to model Scaasi clothes.

Mrs. Fereydon Hoveyda, wife of the Iranian Ambassador to the United Nations, had brought a newcomer, Mrs. Harnoz Sabat of Iran. Mrs. Sabat, who was described in a whisper as being "terribly rich," was apparently an enthusiastic convert to the Scaasi fan club. She took notes and had a list to discuss with the couturier after the show.

PARENTS/CHILDREN

Even Little Ones Can Write From the Heart

By RICHARD FLASTE

Many parents find it more natural to hand 7-year-olds a pencil for creative drawing than to hand it to them for creative writing, perhaps because children appear to have so little control over words.

Yet, they do have something to say. And among people who care about the written word there are those who would like to see every young child writing from the heart, about secrets, fantasies, fears, happiness: about arms, legs, noses—to make writing a part of themselves before it becomes some arcane talent to be admired in others, or pursued in adult education courses.

One of those who is trying to get children to write early is Sandra Hochman, the poet and novelist—her latest novel is "Happiness Is Too Much Trouble"—who started writing poetry when she was a lonely second-grader in Darien, Conn., boarding school, and believes she became a poet then.

As a teacher of poetry, it took her some time to arrive at working with young children. She has taught college students at Fordham University, high school students at the Dalton School and now, at the Hewitt School, has reached 7-year-olds at last.

A Mother-Teacher Image
 In the class that she visits every week, she gives the appearance of the mother-teacher. She shouts at the children when they are noisy ("Quiet, please!") because she thinks that when poets read, they deserve to be heard. And she whispers encouragement when a child who wants to recite from memory has a lapse.

"Now take a deep breath," Miss Hochman says gently, "and start over."

Like an adoring parent she rates all the poems on a "scale of good." She said, "There's good, fabulous and incredible; when they're this age, criticism doesn't make any sense."

Miss Hochman said she doesn't think there is any one method for teaching poetry. Nevertheless, she does have her own approach. An important element is to teach a child to deal with the individual parts of an experience—a particular sensation, a place, a coat-hanger—not, "I had a very nice summer and I feel fine." To that end she assigns specific, often intentionally mundane, subjects (feet, for instance) about which the children can write anything in any style and at any level of competence.

Praise for Courage
 "Isolating the particularities," she said, "is learning to write." And if that particularity is a feeling of self-disdain, then that is part of poetry, too.

She recalled one child who wrote, "I am ugly/Nobody likes me/I am mean." Miss Hochman praised her for "having the guts to write a confessional poem."

She said that as a teacher, "You take the sadness in them and turn it around, so you give back to them the understanding that it belongs in poetry."

Miss Hochman teaches the children what a rhyme is. She does not agree with the contention that rhyme is inhibiting. As long as children aren't forced to use it, she sees rhyme as an enjoyable rhythmic aspect of poetry that certainly should be held open as an option.

In the class, Elizabeth Weilbacher was so enchanted by rhyme that she ended one poem with a moral introduced this way: "I told you a story and the story is..."

A class member whom Miss Hochman finds especially sophisticated ("because she lives with a poet") is her daughter, Ariel, who has a mercurial temperament and who writes, "When I'm sick, I'm very sick/When I'm well, I'm well/When I'm nice, I'm very nice/And when I'm mean you can tell."

Miss Hochman likes it when the children do drawings to go with the poems, or slug them, or use the words as part of a drawing, or do collages—all activities that help them get away from static notions.

Touch of Earthiness
 She loves it when they are funny. And when it's earthy humor, Miss Hochman, who has written an earthy line or two herself, loves it all the more.

Amy Bankham came to class the other day with the assignment on feet completed. "Socks are smelly/shoes are worse/if you call/me I'll plug/my nose first."

Miss Hochman laughed and was thrilled, helping Amy get accustomed to the adulation of fans. Meanwhile, one of the children helped Amy get accustomed to critical adversity.

"I don't get it," said a little voice in the corner.

Job Discrimination Charged by Women Workers

By NADINE BROZAN

An organization whose aims are to upgrade the role of women clerical workers announced yesterday that it had filed complaints of age and sex discrimination against five employment agencies and the New York State Employment Service.

The organization, Women Office Workers, said that the complaints had been filed with the State Division of Human Rights and that it also had asked the city's Department of Consumer Affairs and the State Attorney General's civil rights bureau to investigate.

The organization said it would press for the revocation of licenses if satisfactory responses were not found.

In addition to the state employment division, the agencies named in the complaint are: Snelling and Snelling, Key Employment, Kellogg Employment Service, Davis Personnel Associates and Cosmopolitan Girl Employment Services. The six were chosen from among 100 agencies contacted in January directly or by telephone by three investigators for the Women's Office Workers, which calls itself WOW.

Spokesmen for all the non-government agencies, except for Key Employment, which could not be reached, said that they could not comment on the charges because they had not received formal notification of the complaint. Lynn Flora, president of Davis Personnel Associates, said, "Without the information, I can't answer questions. But I know we don't have one discriminatory job order on file; we just don't accept them."

A spokesman for the state employment agency denied the charges and asserted that age and sex specifications were never entered into its computers.

"Despite the fact that women office workers are the bread and butter of most employment agencies, their civil rights are violated with seeming impunity," Noreen Connell, a WOW staff member and moderator of the news conference at Rosoff's Restaurant, said. She added that previous efforts by other organizations had failed to eradicate agency discrimination.

WOW enlisted three investigators—a man who telephoned 100 employment agencies and two women who visited 10 of them—who used pseudonyms.

When asked why pseudonyms were used, a WOW staff member replied that it was a device used to prevent the agencies from acting to alter their records before the matter reached the hearing stage. Such alterations occurred in similar cases several years ago, she asserted.

The male investigator, whose pseudonym was PAUL, recalled his telephone conversations, saying: "I told the agencies my company

[a nonexistent one] was looking for a young, pretty, receptionist-secretary type between 23 and 25 years old."

"At first I didn't think it would work, the job order was so outrageous, so blatantly discriminatory," he said. "I thought they would laugh when they heard it. Unfortunately, no one laughed."

"Sometimes I was asked if I cared what race the girl was. It was almost as though I could order a white woman, 23 years old, 5 foot 4 inches with any body measurements I wanted."

WOW also sent two women with equal skills, training and background—Dorothy, aged 50, and Marge, 25—for interviews at 10 employment agencies. The only difference between them was experience: Dorothy had worked for 20 years. Marge for six.

"Despite my skills and experience, at two agencies I was told there were no jobs," Dorothy said. "Once, as I was leaving, I saw my partner with a referral card in her hand being courted by the counselor who was solicitous and warm, while I had received the bum's rush."

Though I was complimented on my skills, work background, command of English and dignity, only one agency selected a referral from my job order files. Many counselors confided in me that my only 'problem' was my age."

Marge described what happened to her: "In two of the agencies where my partner was told there were no jobs," she said, "I was sent to interviews for jobs with good pay, bonuses and benefits."

"I felt anger and shock when Dorothy and I would compare notes," she added. "The contrast was really frightening. I asked myself where I would be in 20 years working as a secretary."

FACE CUT IN ROLLS

Kibbee Proposal Would Cut
Enrollment by 30,000—
Stricter Rules Sought

By JUDITH CUMMINGS... The City University of New York would have 30,000 fewer students in three years if the university restructuring plan is put into effect, the school's chancellor, Dr. Robert J. Kibbee, said yesterday.

Stricter Standards... The loss in students over the period would result from stricter standards for remaining in the university and for transfers from two-year into four-year colleges, as well as a 15 percent drop in applications to the university's 8,000-student Open-Admissions program...

Tightened Rules... The bulk of the reduction would come from more stringent rules imposed throughout the university system. For example, the proposed rules call for the following: Students would be permitted to withdraw from courses only during the first three weeks, to end a grading practice in which students linger in classes for weeks and withdraw only when failure is certain...

City U., Forced to Cut, Trying to Maintain Quality and Range

By EDWARD B. FISKE... In facing up to the need to curtail sharply its scale of operations, the City University is doing what other universities and colleges across the country are also doing: revising optimistic projections of the last decade.

Like other educational institutions, the City University is also being forced to re-examine its basic operating principles. What makes the situation here unique is the critical magnitude of the financial crisis—and thus the changes required—and the boldness of open-admissions and other policies that are now coming under fire.

Change in Priorities... At City University, the advent of open admissions in 1970 altered the timetable by causing an immediate influx of new students, but the basic national pattern is holding. The Regents' 1972 master plan for higher education in the state projected that the City University would have 180,000 full-time undergraduate students in 1980. The 1974 interim progress report dropped this estimate to 112,000.

Justice Officials and Politicians Rally to John Jay College Drive... Police Commissioner Michael J. Codd and former United States Attorney General Ramsey Clark yesterday joined with other public officials to lend their support to the campaign for keeping the John Jay College of Criminal Justice alive as an autonomous institution in the City University.

affected have since developed elaborate cases to show why they do not fall into these categories, and most have suggested that there were in fact other unstated criteria. Arthur A. Marcus, executive assistant to the president of York College, which is slated to become a community college, suggested for instance that one of the basic criteria seemed to be, "Do you or do you not have a permanent campus?"

Consolidation Plan... The Kibbee plan, therefore, calls for some reduction in the graduate programs, for instance—but sharper cuts in the number of courses and programs offered in virtually every other area, from liberal arts to the engineering technologies.

Leaders of the Institutions... The Kibbee plan, however, would draw a sharp line between those who qualify for senior colleges and those who must go to community colleges. It moves toward limiting the admissions to senior colleges to those who have shown signs of being able to perform at a reasonably high level.

their goalie, received his second minor penalty of the game.

But the Islanders could not take advantage of it. On the contrary, as the crowd shouted, "Bry-an! Bry-an!"—hoping the rookie would score more points—could take a surprise pass from Chris Oddiefson. He caught the two Potvin's unprepared to defend and broke in cleanly on Glenn Resch for the short-handed goal that raised the Canucks lead to 3-1.

ond half, Niagara held 14-point leads only to see them disappear under the Bonnies' full-court press.

And over the final 2 minutes the Bonnies had chances at the foul line to take the game but failed. With 12 seconds left to play Skip McDaniel of Niagara gave the Eagles a 67-64 lead by converting both free throws on a one-and-one situation.

The Bonnies cut the margin to a single point on Jim Baron's rebound with 3 seconds left. But time ran out before the Bonnies could get off a final shot that would have given them the victory.

The defeat was St. Bonaventure's 10th against 16 victories. Niagara has a 17-10 mark.

In addition to his 24 points, 14 in the first half, Walker pulled down 10 rebounds and Mike Hanley grabbed 11. Greg Sanders, with 18, and Essie Hollis, with 14, paced St. Bonaventure.

Providence 64, Holy Cross 61
SPRINGFIELD, Mass., March 4 (AP)—Bruce Campbell converted four free throws in the last 28 seconds tonight, lifting Providence to a 64-61 victory over Holy Cross in the opening game of the Eastern College Athletic Conference's Division 1 basketball playoff.

In the opener, Holy Cross rallied from a 57-46 deficit to draw within 1 point in the final 10 minutes. With just 1:12 left, Holy Cross went into a press. But the Holy Cross strategy backfired as Campbell was fouled twice in the backcourt and made all four free throws.

V.M.I. 41, Richmond 33
GREENVILLE, S.C., March 4 (AP)—Virginia Military Institute, with a four-corer offense and a ball-hawking defense led by Kelly Lombard, won its first Southern Conference basketball tournament crown in 12 years tonight, defeating Richmond, 41-33. V.M.I. will represent the conference in an N.C.A.A. playoff game March 13 at Charlotte, N.C., against the yet to be determined runner-up in the Southeastern Conference.

Pirates Cancel 2 Games
BRADENTON, Fla., March 4 (UPI)—The Pittsburgh Pirates first spring training games, scheduled for March 10 and 11 with the Chicago White Sox, were canceled today by Joe L. Brown, the Pirate general manager, because of the players-management dispute. The first game was to have been played in Sarasota and the second game in Bradenton.

Rosi Mittermaier Cup Race Choice
COPPER MOUNTAIN, Colo., March 4 (UPI)—Rosé Mittermaier of West Germany, winner of two gold medals in the Winter Olympics, is expected to clinch the women's World Cup slalom championship at this weekend's competition and move another step closer to winning her first overall title in nine years of cup competition. The 25-year-old skier, winner of the Olympic downhill and giant slalom and silver medalist in the slalom, is the overwhelming favorite in the eyes of her competition, although the American team will be racing on familiar ground following last week's nationals. Competition starts tomorrow.

A mood of cautious optimism exists in the young American camp. Cindy Nelson of Lutsen, Minn., bronze medalist in the Olympic downhill, has to be considered a contender and is reportedly healthy again after a bout with the flu that caused her to miss part of the nationals. The Mahre twins from White Pass, Wash., Steven and Phil, have been skiing with skill and have added consistency to their racing. All the races will be conducted over the same course, which starts at an elevation of 11,000 feet. The events were switched to Copper Mountain five days ago because of a lack of snow at Heavenly Valley. Heavy snow fell as the competitors, most of them from Europe, took their first look at the trail today.

Sports News Briefs

More than 1,000 entrants, including four defending champions, will take part in the 12th annual all-American open karate championships at Madison Square Garden's Felt Forum tomorrow.

More than 400 black-belt performers will be among the competitors performing karate, kung fu and taekwon do in free fighting and form categories. The defenders are George Thomas of Washington, men's fighting, Shelli Katinsky of Lexington, Pa., women's fighting, and Robert J. of Richmond, men's form, and Ann Marie McKeanen of Woodbridge, N. J., women's form. Preliminary bouts will begin at 5 A.M., with championship finals scheduled to start at 7:30 P.M.

dent teams and second-place conference teams.

Once-beaten Marquette, ranked second to Indiana; Nevada-Las Vegas, the nation's top-scoring team; Notre Dame and Virginia Tech received bids as major independents. Bids also were extended to the runners-up from the Southeastern, Big Ten, Pacific-8, Atlantic Coast and Metro-Six conferences.

One spot was left to be settled after tomorrow night's games. The committee will award that berth to DePaul, an independent with a 19-8 won-lost record, or a second-place team from either the Western Athletic Conference (probably Utah) or the Big Eight (probably Kansas State or Nebraska).

Besides Princeton, Rutgers and Indiana, other teams definitely in the tournament are Michigan (20-6), the Big Ten runner-up, Indiana; Alabama (21-3) and Tennessee (20-5), battling for the Southeastern Conference title; the defending University of California, Los Angeles (22-4), the two top finishers in the Pac-8; Arizona, the Western Athletic Conference victor; and Western Michigan (23-2), the Mid-American Conference representative.

Dee Andros, the Oregon State athletic director, said he was "flabbergasted and disgusted" at the selection of Washington as the Pac-8 runner-up with the conference race outcome undecided.

"How could they pick a No. 2 team before tonight's Oregon and Oregon State games?" Andros said yesterday. "I believe Oregon and

U.S. Gets Warning On Games Finance
WASHINGTON, March 4 (UPI)—The House Transportation and Commerce subcommittee was told today that the 1984 Winter Olympics, scheduled for Lake Placid, N.Y., if federal money were not committed to the games by July.

Ogden Reid, head of the New York Department of Environmental Conservation, said that the International Olympic Committee, to meet in Montreal in July, could withdraw its approval of Lake Placid as the site if it were not convinced that sufficient financing was assured.

Secretary of State Mario M. Cuomo of New York said that the requested Federal money ($50 million) would be used to build permanent facilities that could also be used to train future Olympic athletes. He said New York State would put up about $12 million for the games.

Ski-Flying Practice Dominated by Berg
OBERSTORF, West Germany, March 4 (AP)—Geir-Uwe Berg, a 29-year-old Norwegian, soared 187 meters—just two meters under the world record—during training today for this weekend's Oberstorf ski flying championship. Walter Steiner of Switzerland and Heinz Wostipwo of East Germany, co-world record holders, leapt 158 and 156 meters, respectively.

Toni Insauer, Austria's 17-year-old jumping ace, went 155 meters for the fourth best jump. The East Germans were the most consistent in the practice session.

Milk-Fed Horse Skims to Victory
LINFIELD, England, March 4 (AP)—Boom Ducker won a Lingfield steeplechase in convincing style today and his trainer, Doug Marks, said the horse trained on milk.

"Boom Ducker has been mopping up seven pounds of milk powder a day and has come back to form," Marks said of the 9-year-old jumper who finished last in his previous race in early January. Marks said his veterinarian recommended the new diet after finding the horse lacked protein.

Racquets' Elite Compete Behind a Closed Door

By GERALD ESKENAZI

There may be Seven Deadly Sins and the Ten Commandments and Catch-22, but in the tight little world of racquets all that matters these days is Rule 12.

"That is the rule," explained the formidable Clarence C. Pell yesterday, "that once the door is closed it is not to be opened until the match is over." Pell has played racquets for more than 40 years and is the son of the former world champion.

The door leads to the 60 by 30 foot, slate-covered court—one of nine in North America—where the world's top players are competing in the United States championship.

It is open to the public at the Racquet and Tennis Club, on Park Avenue between 52d and 53d Streets. However, it is a nominal gesture, as not more than 150 people can be seated on the glistening mahogany benches that serve as a gallery above and behind the court.

Racquets (the American version, strangely, contains the "q" while the British spell it with a "k") is, not squash, nor tennis nor any combination of the two.

It is, in fact, so rarely played that there are only about 150 who regularly play on a competitive level in the United States.

Yet the players on display at the club, through Sunday's finale, era as fast as athletes anywhere, with knowledge of backspin and banking that would make any pool hustler envious.

Once the door is closed the players are alone in a charcoal-gray box.

They whip their skinny little racquets at a ball that is about the size of a peach pit, but round, made for 25 cents of plastic, and wrapped with adhesive tape.

The ball explodes off the racquet at more than 100 miles an hour and comes back dangerously—off the sidewalls, off the backwall or just straight out.

"It's feet and eyes and anticipation," said Andrew Milne of London, a 24-year-old top player who halted the 64-year-old Pell yesterday.

"I played my first match in 1932," said Pell. "So a 44-year spread in matches is worth talking about, isn't it?"

The world's best player, Bill Surtees, a Chicago advertising man, is in the tournament also. Surtees is originally from England, where a dozen boarding schools have their own courts.

"This," said Surtees, "is the purest game. It's not like anything else and that's why Americans have trouble with it. You can't start it at the age of 21, which is what they do here when they join a club. I began playing when I was 14 years old. God, it's 14 years, isn't that awful?"

U.S. AMATEUR RACQUETS FIRST ROUND SINGLES

Edward Wilczon, New York, defeated James English, New York, 15-4, 15-11; Robert Johnson, New York, defeated Richard Lubliner, Dallas, 10-11, 15-5, 15-7; Robert Pomeroy, New York, defeated Robert Libby, Boston, 13-10, 15-11, 15-3; Andrew Milne, London, defeated Clarence Pell, New York, 15-9, 15-9; William Gattuso, Philadelphia, defeated Philip Stockton, Boston, 15-12, 15-12.

DOUBLES

William Surtees and Richard Lubliner, Chicago, defeated Carl DeGorsart and Nicholas Gardner, New York, 15-12, 15-4; Andrew Milne and Peter Reed, New York, defeated Edward Ullmann and Clarence Pell, New York, 15-11, 15-4.

Lutz said. "It's ries me, or I'm lucky enough to play with him. It bugs me because I think I'm the better doubles player."

As for leading of the series, he said, "there is some pressure in starting the thing off. Then again, it's probably better than being down, 2-0, and having to win."

Lutz had lost all five of his previous World Cup matches. "I had match-point one in singles, and a triple match-point once in doubles," Lutz said. "But I just never got the luck when I needed it."

Tonight was Alexander's first singles match in World Cup competition, but he said opening up the series didn't bother him. He admitted that he usually played better when he was behind. And he tried to gear up for the match by thinking negatively.

"The Americans have the stronger team on paper," he said. "So I have the feeling that I'm down before I walk on the court. That way I'm fighting back as soon as I start."

That worked for the first set, but not for the final two, as Lutz won his first World Cup match.

"It's really a relief," Lutz said, smiling a winner's smile for the first time.

Delay Stirs Hopes of Pay Boosts

the rest are the time-honored "holdouts." But this year, because of the possibility that masses of players might be declared free to sell themselves in the open market, hundreds of players have declined to sign.

The pattern varies widely with the player's security and the owner's ability to pay. The Oakland A's and Minnesota Twins are confronted with something close to a revolt by balking players.

The Mets today signed Dave Kingman, who hit 36 home runs last summer, and Nino Espinosa, a rookie pitcher, and brought their totals to 29 signed and 7 unsigned.

The Cincinnati Reds, paying the price as the world champions, have signed Johnny Bench for $200,000 but must still come to terms with stars like Joe Morgan, Pete Rose, Tony Perez, Dave Concepcion, Don Gullett and George Foster.

"The owners don't seem to communicate very well," said Jerry Kosman of the Mets, who signed for $75,000 last week. "Their chief negotiators aren't even owners. I'm not looking to become a free agent, but you've got whole clubs like the Twins and A's where guys want to get out."

They have been working out at the college for a week under the general direction of Seaver, the 22-game winner and shop steward of the Mets. They drew 37 players yesterday from half a dozen teams that train on the Gulf Coast of Florida, and today they drew a couple of dozen from the Mets, Cardinals, Pirates and the Detroit Tigers, forming the biggest collection of major leaguers in action in the country.

"If we get any more guys," quipped Bud Harrelson of the Mets, "we're going to have to split up into two workouts a day."

Stargell's team was a montage of the Pirates, Cardinals and Tigers, with such players as Bill Freehan, Reggie Smith and Bill Robinson.

The Torre team even played like the Mets, taking a 5-0 lead but quickly losing it under a barrage of homers over fences about 320 feet away. Smith started the rally by hitting one off his Cardinal teammate, Bob Forsch. Then came three homers in a row off Forsch the next inning; by Smith again, Tommy Zimmer and Jack Heilmann.

That made it 6-5 and Forsch had pitched his quota, so Seaver relieved him on the mound while Stargell called: "You can't take him out now, man."

Seaver, who had a touch of the flu this week, was touched for a single by Simmons, who usually punishes the Mets at bat. But the Cardinal was thrown out at second base trying to stretch the hit into a double and Seaver observed: "Well, I finally got Simmons out."

But he wasn't so lucky later when Stargell cleared the right-field fence.

"We came to play," said Jon Matlack, the Met pitcher, explaining the ritualistic outbreak of handshaking on the bench.

"This is the only spring training I've ever been at," said Stargell, reversing the old adage, "where the hitters were ahead of the pitchers."

White in Florida

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., March 4 (UPI)—Roy White joined the slowly increasing number of New York Yankees in town today saying he could not wait any longer to begin workouts.

White, who has already signed his contract, flew down from his home in New Jersey and began running and calisthenics with Larry Gura at a local high school field.

Brooks Is Promoted

TULSA, Okla., March 4 (AP)—Bob Brooks, sports information director and vice president for business affairs at Oral Roberts University, was named athletic director today. Brooks succeeds Bob Vanatta, recently named commissioner of the Ohio Valley Conference.

A CAR THAT'S INEXPENSIVE, NOT CHEAP.

Quality in an economy car. It's different things to different people. To some people, it's engineering and construction; to some, inexpensive upkeep; and to some, low initial cost. To Toyota, it's all these things plus value, the most for your money. That's what you get with a Toyota Corolla. Starting at $2,789* for the 2-Door Sedan is certainly inexpensive, now read why it's not cheap...

Quality is dependability. Dependability provided by over 40 years of building small cars. Experience which has led to unit body welded construction for strength and a virtually rattle free ride, and transistorized ignition.

A Toyota Corolla is comfortable across town or cross country. Hi-back bucket seats, similar in design to those found in more expensive cars, cradle you in comfort—and power boosted flo-thru ventilation keeps fresh air circulating.

*Based on manufacturer's suggested retail price—price does not include tax, license, transportation charges, value package and optional equipment.

Quality can be felt in handling. A Toyota Corolla ride is good even when the road is bad thanks to the MacPherson strut front suspension—the same system used on our sporty Celica line. And to bring you to a sure, smooth stop the Corolla has power assisted front disc brakes.

A quality automobile is efficient. The Corolla's performance is derived from a 1.6 liter, hemi-head, OH-V engine to couple smooth building pick-up with great gas mileage. In 1976 EPA test, the SR-5 Corolla with 5-speed overdrive transmission was rated 39 mpg on the highway, 24 city. The standard Corolla with 4-speed transmission was rated at 36 mpg highway, 24 city. These mileage figures are estimates. The actual mileage you get will vary, depending on your driving habits and your car's condition and equipment. A durable 3-speed automatic transmission or 5-speed overdrive transmission is available in most models.

You get Corolla quality in all six models. Besides the 2-Door Sedan and 2-Door Hardtop, models include a 2- and 4-Door Deluxe, a Wagon, and the sporty SR-5 Hardtop. See them all at your local dealer.

There are nearly 1,000 authorized Toyota dealers in the United States. These same dealers comprise a network of service departments across the country staffed with Toyota trained mechanics in every important phase of automotive technology. And to back up this service network is a highly advanced parts system. Service. Quality. Quality service. You asked for it. You got it. Toyota.

When Yonkers Raceway opens its spring meeting next Monday night, a new policy will limit the amount of experimenting that can be done with modified sulky. At the made of metal, "Race standard wood Tracks sulky. It has been used with success at Roosevelt Raceway, whose 69-night winter meeting ends tomorrow.

At Yonkers, only one change to the new sulky will be permitted. If a horse starts the meeting with the standard bike, his trainer can try the modified one. But if he switches back to the standard bike, the horse must remain with that sulky for the rest of the meet.

The same policy applies for a horse that starts the meet with the modified sulky, switches to standard and then reverts to the modified model. "We're trying to make handicapping more consistent," said Ed Barker, the Yonkers racing secretary. "This should help the public avoid confusion."

Up to this week, the new modified sulky had been used by 1,633 horses in 510 of the 567 races at Roosevelt Raceway's meeting. It had produced 298 winners, 256 seconds and 246 thirds.

Two of the top contenders in tomorrow's six-furlong Swift Stakes went through final workouts yesterday. Lord Henribee, the probable favorite, worked half a mile in 47 3/5 seconds on Belmont Park's training track at Aqueduct. What'sopleaseure went three furlongs in 0:35 3/5. Eustace, another good 3-year-old expected to run in the Swift, arrived from Florida.

London Company and Toonerville head their divisions of the Hialeah Turf Cup today as the Florida track closes its 51st meeting. Each division of the Turf Cup is to be contested on the main 1 1/2 mile, has drawn 11 horses.

This is Hialeah's last meeting under the ownership of a group headed by John Galbreath. The group has agreed to sell the prestigious but financially troubled track to John Brunetti, a New Jersey building contractor, for about $14 million.

5-Month Inquiry Foreseen In Leaking of Pike Report

By RICHARD D. LYONS Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 4—Representative John J. Flynn, chairman of the House Ethics Committee, said today that his committee's investigation of the leaking of the Pike report could take five months and might branch out into the reported loss of 232 secret documents that the Central Intelligence Agency had lent to the House Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. Flynn insisted that his panel's investigation was not directed against "any one man or group of persons," but was intended to find out "what happened to one or more copies of the preliminary draft of the report" of the Select Committee on Intelligence, headed by Representative Oles G. Pike, Democrat of Suffolk County.

"I don't know and I don't think that any of the 12 members of the committee know what direction the inquiry will take," the Georgia Democrat said in an interview. But he emphasized that it would be "neither an inquisition nor a witch hunt."

The direction of the investigation may have taken a new turn today with the announcement by the C.I.A. that 232 documents, about 100 of them dealing with sensitive budget matters that the agency had lent to the committee, had not been returned.

The C.I.A. wrote Mr. Pike requesting that he look into the matter. Some Top Secret Papers A C.I.A. spokesman said the missing documents included: "One hundred and three dealing with top secret audits of the agency budget."

"Twenty-eight top secret papers bearing on the coup in Portugal." "Thirteen top secret papers relating to the strategic arms limitation talks between the United States and the Soviet Union."

"Fifteen top secret papers having to do with agency procurement." "Thirty-five classified secret papers that related to C.I.A. personnel at work in other agencies of the Government."

"Eight other secret papers." Mr. Pike said in an interview that it was his "guess" that the classified documents were "either in boxes at the C.I.A. or at the National Archives" to which some of the committee records had been sent. He added that others had been buried.

He said that he had asked the C.I.A. for a "bill of particulars" on exactly what the agency considered to be missing to see if they were still in the committee files.

Asked if he believed the ethics committee would investigate the incident, Mr. Pike answered: "I'm not going to speculate."

Bridge: A Bidding Theory Mystery: Meaning of a Jump Raise

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

One of the minor mysteries of bidding theory is the exact meaning of a jump raise of partner's major-suit response. Your partner opens one club, for example. You respond one heart, and he raises to three hearts. What does he have?

He might have a balanced hand with about 16 or 17 points, on which he has foolishly neglected to open one no-trump. He might have an unbalanced hand of the same strength, or perhaps a semi-balanced hand with a 2-4-2-3 distribution. He might have a balanced hand he thought too strong for one no-trump originally, although that would really call for a raise to game.

He might have a balanced hand that he had judged not quite enough for an original no-trump. The True Explanation This last explanation was the true one on the diagrammed deal from a recent Swiss team championship. The optimistic North player, pushing his partner into a shaky game, was Alan Schwartz of Scarsdale, N.Y., who won the event and another in the same tournament.

The South player, put to the test in the play, was Don Probst of Endwell, N.Y. After the lead of the spade queen, he faced four apparently certain losers, two clubs, one diamond and one spade, with the possibility of more if the clubs or hearts broke badly. The spade queen was allowed to win, and another spade was played. The ace won, and the club ace was cashed. East missed his chance for brilliant defense: dropping the club king would have defeated the contract, but it would give away an important trick if South held, for example, Q J x in the suit.

Once West had played the club ten, South ruffed a spade and cashed the ace and queen of hearts. This prepared a partial elimination position, and a club forced West to win.

North SOUTH A54 A108 Q62 Q863 Both sides were ble. The bidding: North East South 1 N Pass 1 S Pass 3 C Pass 3 C Pass West led the spade.

maintain tricks in drawing the remainder in the process. East and West thought to say to each other "Why didn't you the king of clubs?" East "That might I wrong," West retorted "You offered a spade king at trick lead a diamond?" "That might I wrong too," South simply said.

The Orange Memorial Tournament, New Jersey, is being played today at E Plaza, Prospect Orange, N.J., with the following schedule: Today—Men's 9 pairs, 1:30 P.M., and women's 9 pairs, 2:30 P.M. Tomorrow—One P.M. and 7:30 P.M. Sunday—Mixed 5 pairs and 9 pairs and novice 9 pairs.

WEST WEST J8 K1084 EAST EAST 7 1973 SOUTH SOUTH 8 Q62 86

It did not matter what West did. If he had played a diamond, South would have run it around to his queen. Instead, West chose to lead a spade, and South simply pitched a diamond from his dummy and ruffed in his hand. He conceded a club to East, and made the rebid.

Israel Across Lebanon Line

TEL AVIV, March 4 (AP)—Israeli troops penetrated half a mile into Lebanon on an anti-guerrilla raid and blew up an Arab house used as a terrorist base, the military command said today.

A command communiqué reported no Arab casualties and said the Israeli raiding party returned unharmed from the night foray into the village.

Arab gunners fired rockets across the hilly frontier toward the Israeli border settlement of Menara after the raid, the second Israeli intrusion in a week, the command said. The rockets missed their targets.

Americans of the last 50 years so perplexed and perturbed their... Attaining instant celebrity amount... adulation as a hero for his New... to Paris flight in 1927, he plummeted... most equally instant obloquy in 1940-... espousing nonintervention in World... II in such a fashion that many beheld... is pro-Nazi. In later years he emerged... a self-imposed obscurity as a vigor... champion of conservation and opposi... to supersonic airplanes.

whether as hero or villain, Lindbergh... seemed to live in an impenetrable... of mystery. What sort of a person... really? What was he truly up to?... made him tick? There were tantalizing... but no clear picture of the person... that appeared to jibe with his out... self. One explanation is that Lindbergh... deliberately wrapped himself in a... n privacy about his persona, rebuffing... interviewers and resolutely opposing... phies. He led, certainly after the... nomadic life—here today, gone to... on mysterious errands. Even his... never knew when to expect him home... some journey or other.

biographers so far have tried... hands with Lindbergh. Kenneth S... ventured "The Hero" in 1959, a... ical account. Walter S. Ross wrote... "Last Hero" in 1965, a book that Lindbergh... after some urging and on... he compiled a 76-page, single-spaced... tten syllabus of errors, most of... niggling. After Lindbergh's death in... a copy of this manuscript was made... to Mr. Ross, and he revised and... d his book.

Relies Mainly on Clippings

now Leonard Mosley, a Briton with... biographies to his credit (a life of... n Göring preceded this book),... forward Mr. Mosley, who never... with Lindbergh or members of his... relies mainly on an assiduous read... newspaper clippings, Sir Harold... 's diaries, the recollections of... Lindbergh acquaintances and other... ical source material. Writing with... id narrative pace, Mr. Mosley has... d a readable, slick, error-filled... life—lopsided because it... chiefly that part of Lindbergh's... hat were lived in the glare of pub... while skipping lightly over the last... of his life when he was engaged... ublic enterprises.

Mosley's publishers bill his book as... "Well, hardly. Lindbergh, the... ationist and naturalist, whom I... rom 1928 to his death, is treated... ough, although it can be fairly argued... activities in these areas were more revealing of the inner man, certain... ly the mature man, than some of his ear... lier deeds and misdeeds.

Mr. Mosley's book is most interesting for... the light it sheds on Lindbergh's relation... ships with the Nazis from 1936 to 1939... He argues that Lindbergh was lied to about... German air power and that he swallowed... the lies whole. This, the author says, ac... counts for Lindbergh's warnings to Britain... France and the United States that they... faced quick and ignominious defeat in any... war in the West. Mr. Mosley also pictured... Lindbergh as an elitist with muddled views... of Nordic superiority that included intrac... table fears of the perils of world Communism.

To a degree, Anne Morrow Lindbergh... agrees in "The Flower and the Nettle," the... fourth volume of her autobiography that... she presents in the form of extracts from... her letters and diaries. In the introduc... tion to the book surely the most difficult... she has written, she concedes that the... Nazis "used" her husband, but she protests... vehemently that he did not share their... political or anti-Semitic views.

Intimate and Appealing

Although "The Flower and the Nettle" is... largely about its author and her painf... ul development as a writer and as a per... son with an independent identity, the... book also draws a careful portrait of her... husband as a restless man, a stubborn... man, earnest and curious, and much given... to testing himself (and her) in dangerou... situations. His self-confidence was bound... less and he was afflicted with the sin of... pride. This is the most mature of Mrs... Lindbergh's memoirs and, although it... lacks drama because letters and diaries... do not lend themselves to such a structure... it is intimate and appealing and totally... honest.

Of the biographies, Walter Ross's is far... and away the best. Despite its inevitable... reliance on secondary sources and despite... its lack of material on Lindbergh as a... conservationist, the book was obviously... written with patience and thought and... fairness. He seems to have talked to every... one in this country who knew the Lindbergh... behind the headlines, including some of... the children, former domestics in the... Lindbergh home and an airline attendant... he befriended and with whom he carried... on a six-year correspondence. The result... is a balanced and perceptive book.

Even so, there are obvious gaps, and... there will be so long as the Lindbergh... archives at Yale are sealed. Brendan Gill... it is said, will have limited access to them... for a celebratory book he is preparing for... the 50th anniversary of the Paris flight... But otherwise they are closely guarded... and permission to quote from Lindbergh... letters known to exist outside the archives... and from his published writings is severely... limited. Sometime in the next three years... a manuscript that Lindbergh was working... on at his death, tentatively titled "Values,"... will be published, and that may add more... light to his evident complexities, contrarie... ties, humors and mental processes. Until... then, the best we have is speculation—... and the best of it is in "The Last Hero."

U.S. Appeals Court Upholds Mortgage-Case Convictions

A United States appellate court affirmed yesterday the conviction of Harry Bernstein, his wife, Rose, and three other defendants in a mortgage-insurance case.

They had been convicted in Federal District Court in Brooklyn at the end of an eight-month trial on charges of conspiracy, bribery and making false statements for mortgage-insurance loans.

The conviction was affirmed 2 to 1 by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. The basic charge was that the Bernsteins ob... tained favorable appraisals of property for their lending in... situation, the Eastern Service... Priorities in Albany...

Members of the State Legislature who are attempting to rewrite Governor Carey's tough austerity budget to eliminate cuts in local aid and other pet programs are risking a debacle that could be far more damaging to their own communities—and to the state itself—than the relatively modest reductions that Mr. Carey has proposed.

New York State is rapidly approaching critical deadlines for refinancing endangered construction agencies and for financing its own first-quarter requirements—principally local aid payments. Unless the Legislature moves quickly to adopt a balanced budget and other legislation needed to support complex financing arrangements, the long and arduous effort of the Carey administration to save the state and its agencies from default could collapse.

The Carey budget is not sacrosanct. But it is unrealistic to believe that a $600 million deficit can be erased—as law and fiscal prudence demand—without some reduction in local assistance, which accounts for 60 percent of the total budget. It is irresponsible to try to write off a portion of the deficit by arbitrarily raising revenue estimates, as many legislators would do, especially in view of the persisting decline in the state's economy.

Any reduction in state aid places painful new burdens on localities throughout the state, as citizens of this beleaguered city are well aware. But local officials and taxpayers, and their representatives in Albany must face up to the fact that the alternative may well be no state aid at all.

The solvency of the state government is the first line of defense for every New York community. Preserving that solvency by the prompt enactment of an honestly balanced state budget and other essential emergency legislation must be the first priority for every lawmaker.

... City Hall Regression?

There have been disturbing reports from City Hall—denied by some key mayoral aides—that the Beame administration is considering deferring major budget cuts until the final year of the three-year austerity plan in hope of more help from Albany and from a new Administration in Washington.

That is just the kind of wishful thinking and evasion of hard decisions that undermined confidence in this city last year, propelling a serious crisis to near disaster. Although New York desperately needs more state and Federal aid, the fact is that assistance from higher levels of government is slated to shrink during the coming year. This is the harsh reality that ought to be factored into the new Beame budget.

It is reasonable to hope that Albany in time will assume some of the costs of the judicial system and of higher education now unfairly borne by this city, and that Washington will move toward a more rational welfare program, with full Federal funding. But it is pure fantasy to expect early relief from a state government which itself faces severe fiscal problems or from a Federal establishment that is deeply divided over welfare and other local assistance issues.

Furthermore, it is widely recognized that the current city estimate of the deficit that must be eliminated over the next two years—$821 million—seriously understates the true deficit, which some informed observers place as high as $1.5 billion. In the unlikely event that additional state or Federal assistance were forthcoming within the plan period, every penny would be needed to help make up for the additional deficit; nothing would be available to ease the spending reductions mandated under current budget projections.

While hoping for the best, this city must move decisively to fulfill its commitment to balance an honest budget over the next 27 months. Perhaps that will prove impossible as the debts continue to grow, but that is no excuse for not trying. The possibilities of success certainly will not be enhanced, and the prospects for sympathetic help surely will be reduced, by any renewed posture of procrastination and self-delusion in City Hall.

Dissent in Moscow

About 100 foreign political groups—Communist parties and allied leftist factions—have been in attendance at the 25th Soviet Communist Party Congress. Of these a handful—notably the Rumanians, Yugoslavs, Italians, British and French—have attracted worldwide attention by sounding an independent note in the speeches their representatives have given to the congress.

Dissidence in the world Communist movement has a very old history. In the early years of the Communist International in the 1920's, Stalin's domestic struggles against the leftist Trotskyites and the rightist Bukharinists were reflected in similar splits in other Communist parties; the Comintern had to be purged periodically of dissident individuals and groups. At the height of the bloody Stalinist purges in the 1930's, foreign Communists resident in Moscow were prominent among those murdered or imprisoned as Stalin's thugs sought out "capitalist spies." In the mid and late 1940's, the Stalinist witch hunts against foreign Communist dissidents ended in the disgrace of the American Communist leader Earl Browder, the excommunication of Tito and his Yugoslav Communists, and the execution or imprisonment—after farcical frameup "trials"—of numerous high Communists in Eastern Europe.

It is evident that for the moment the Soviet leadership believes it must tolerate heretics—or at least some heretics; and Mr. Brezhnev has issued a joint public statement with Italy's Enrico Berlinguer declaring his "respect for the independence" of each Communist party. But there is not even anything new in that.

Mr. Brezhnev signed similar declarations with Alexander Dubcek in 1968; and there can be little doubt that given the opportunity Mr. Brezhnev would gladly see to it that the current crop of foreign Communist dissidents shared disgrace with Mr. Dubcek, or perhaps the fate of Laszlo Rajk, Rudolf Slansky, Bela Kun and numerous other deceased victims of Moscow's incurable zeal for conformity among those it recognizes as Communists.

Rip-Off in the Mines...

House approval this week of an expensive program of disguised pensions for coal miners and their families was an exercise in profligacy, not liberalism.

The bill, pushed through by the Democratic majority under stiff pressure from the United Mine Workers, grossly expands a program under which victims of "black lung"—the often death-dealing affliction of men accustomed to inhaling dust-filled air underground—and their survivors currently receive about $1 billion a year in Federal benefits.

This is triple the sum Congress envisaged when it set up the plan in 1969 as part of the much-needed Mine Health and Safety Act. On top of that heavy burden, the new measure would give every miner who has had thirty years in bituminous or 25 years in anthracite an automatic entitlement to full black-lung benefits of roughly $200 to $400 a month with no need for medical examination or other proof.

The bill would also extend black-lung benefits to the widows and orphans of miners with at least seventeen years' employment who died in mine accidents—again with no necessary link to lung impairment.

The first-year cost of the new benefits is estimated by Congressional budget analysts at $217 million, but the bill proposes that part of this be met by a tonnage tax to be paid by coal operators. This is a distinction without a difference since the net effect of such a royalty would be to raise the price of producing coal by as much as $2.50 a ton—a charge that would immediately filter through the economy to be reflected in higher utility bills and other boosts for inflation.

Miners retiring after thirty years already receive $375 a month in pensions out of the union retirement and welfare fund, which is financed out of a royalty that averages close to $1.50 on every ton of coal mined. There is no justification for an additional impost of the kind this legislation would provide. The Senate has an obligation to kill the bill, not leave that duty to the President.

... in Job Safety...

President Ford's admonition to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration to treat businessmen as "friends, not enemies" is apparently having its desired pre-election effect: a slowdown in enforcement of safety rules that were underenforced to start with.

The law creating OSHA was passed in 1970 as a belated recognition of the need for effective Federal action to halt the appalling toll in deaths and injuries caused by industrial accidents and job-related disease. Unlike the parallel safety law in the coal mines, OSHA never came close to achieving its objectives, principally because of slack administration and industry foot-dragging.

Now the President is openly identifying with the law's critics as part of his campaign determination to project a conservative image. In the wake of his demand in a campaign speech to a business audience that the agency abandon "harassment," comes the disclosure that it has deferred until after Election Day the effective date for exposure standards covering such potentially noxious substances as ammonia, arsenic, asbestos, beryllium, cotton dust and lead.

The safety of millions of workers must not be made a political pawn. The Administration has been disgracefully negligent up to now in enforcing the law; to worsen that miserable record in the interest of winning corporate campaign support is an insupportable sacrifice of employee health as well as a breach of legal obligation.

... and on the Rails

The benefits the country should derive from reorganization of the debt-encumbered Northeast railroads will be greatly reduced if Conrail operates as a monopoly, without the strengthened competition from solvent roads which Congress contemplated.

Indeed, for many areas the new operation may prove a disastrously expensive substitute for the bankrupt Penn Central and other ailing lines—one that charges more for freight and provides little or no improvement in service despite monumental public start-up subsidies.

That fear is stirred by the decision of the Long Island Rail Road to raise its freight rates by 30 percent, effective tomorrow, to comply with a ukase from Conrail. The Long Island is not part of the new quasi-Federal rail network, unlike all the connecting lines on which it will have to depend after Conrail begins operating trains April 1. Most of the extra money will go to Conrail.

Similar exactions are likely to become widespread as a result of the collapse of labor talks which were supposed to pave the way for competitive service in important commercial sectors through takeover of 2,000 miles of Conrail track by the Chessie System and the Southern Railway.

Hays T. Watkins, head of the Chessie, yesterday placed major blame for the talks' failure on the veto power which Congress had, in effect, given the railroad unions. The reorganization law made any acquisition agreement dependent on submission by the solvent carriers to union demands, and the unions held out for featherbedding work rules and income guarantees of the kind that had helped speed the Penn Central into receivership.

The unions are not alone in feasting off the carcass of the old roads. The same predatory spirit seems to animate trustees of one of the Pennsy's Canadian subsidiaries; they have declared a staggering dividend of $60 a share, with the apparent intention of liquidating a $9 million cash reserve before Conrail takes control. The for-profit railroad that Congress hoped to create, is putting profit in the wrong pockets.

Letters to the Editor

Of Judges, Teachers and Salaries

To the Editor:

Two of your Feb. 13 editorials: One, a "compassionate apology for the action of the 44 Federal judges suing the Congress for what amounts to a raise; the other, an acid comment on the New York City Board of Education's current budget request, which you view as stemming from the United Federation of Teachers' unreasonable contract demands.

How sharply the juxtaposition of these two editorials points up your perception of reality. On the one hand, The Times sadly contemplates the Federal judiciary struggling manfully, on $42,500 per annum (plus benefits) and finally forced to forsake dignity to pursue solvency. As you point out, these judges could (assuming they are of the "quality the nation needs on the Federal bench") earn anywhere from $85,000 to $200,000 a year elsewhere. We all know how scrupulous and full of integrity is the highly paid legal profession—witness the Watergate case.

On the other hand, The Times lectures, the "costly loopholes" in the agreement negotiated between the U.F.T. and the Board of Education (including wage benefits and increments still frozen pending Emergency Control Board review) would apparently grossly overcompensate teachers—teachers being persons who, unlike the impoverished judiciary, are living off the fat of the land on salaries which do not exceed, at maximum, $20,300.

My purpose in writing this letter is not to comment on the propriety of the judges' suit or on the justice of their case. I do want to know why a lawyer, who may have risen to the bench by virtue of his party affiliation as often as for his legal ability, is seen by you as entitled to generous compensation for his services while teachers are to be viewed with disapproval for their far more modest demands.

Is a judge so much more valuable to our society? Or is it the superb organization, efficiency and record of the Federal bench we are to reward?

Perhaps it is the true nature of our society The Times is tacitly acknowledging, i.e., that judges are in a position to be "bought" if such an eventuality is not forestalled by princely salaries to minimize temptation. No one is offering to bribe teachers.

In this marketplace of a society, the teacher holds no cards which can materially enrich others—no lucrative contracts, no corrupt verdicts.

Our only trust is the education of the young, and it seems neither they nor the principle of education in itself is highly esteemed by men of power.

On Revealing Secrets

To the Editor:

A man propositioned a lady—she was indignant: "What an outrage, I dare you! What do you think I am? The man was embarrassed and agitated: 'I am terribly sorry, I did not want to offend you, I was you I had no intention of paying.' In your Feb. 15 editorial you of Daniel Schorr, who offered the H Intelligence Committee report, the House had voted not to pull to The Village Voice on the ground a contribution to a freedom-of-press group. Your reproach was taken, but Mr. Schorr's action irresponsible regardless of who money was involved.

Primarily, though, your indignation comes with ill grace from the ployers of Seymour Hersh, who paid by The Times to obtain information the C.I.A. wished to keep. Whether it is the C.I.A. or the press, what you sanction is the man—a journalist or not is immaterial—may arrogate the right to what is or is not to be kept. What is or is not important to country's security and defense against the judgment of the elected representatives of the people and of civil servants legally appointed by an elected Administration.

What is the point of establishing supervisory committees to disclose secret when this can be done anyone under the guise of a national rights as you interpret it?

There is a good deal of confusion between liberty and license, a Times is only too frequently fostering it. Your recent editorial denouncing murder was welcome, a bit surprising. The confusion between liberty and license has the permissiveness for which the country is paying a heavy price in the shocking crime. Externally it may well seem the price of the loss of true strength and security are aimed by the Schorrs and Hersh.

Paid or unpaid, what you in your editorial is manifestly immoral and dangerous intruder of free speech. The distinct have made is very similar to in the story of the man and the

Toward an Oil Stock

To the Editor:

We can build a security of crude oil so as to weaken the world oil cartel of the nations. We want to (a) increase producing capacity, and also increase the share of those nations which (b) are smallest gain most by competition, additional revenues most and afford to cut production, and most hostile to the United States have not tried to damage it.

Our Government should non-Arab oil-producing govt OPEC members and non-Arab with the proposition that the new production capacity, in our assuring a market during years. Thus a billion-barrel would require new capacity lion barrels daily for three current prices, the new capax be paid for in something betw and twelve months, depending producing country, and would to profit by for years to come. The non-hostile producing (Indonesia, Iran, Mexico, et al.) can build new capacity many times our stockpile amounts. They would wish to operating, and take a sure gain against the risk of disarray. It is in their interest that risk, and the burden of capacity, on to the more affluent hostile) cartel members. The comes from more eager producer weaker the cartel; the more in non-hostile countries, the security of supply.

We cannot possibly lose deals. But we must first abandon fantasies of cooperation with Arabia, the biggest cartel which ought therefore to be target. (Prof.) M. A., Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Mass., Feb.

How to Curb Crime

To the Editor:

On Feb. 23 you published a editorial that focused on helping of crime. While it is a motion to help people who have victimized, I believe that the should be on preventing crime. The crime statistics for 1975 in Brooklyn are 25,745 robberies, burglaries, 9,286 felonious 19,949 auto thefts and 1,155 rapes. Do we have to go on living these frightening statistics?

People who want to drink or themselves to death are not support their habit. We should reduce the number of pushers

We should make it illegal to possess handguns, particularly Saturday-night specials. We provide jobs for every person work. Forty-five percent of the city young are unemployed. Unemployment is demoralizing and leads to criminal behavior.

By our rigidity in not changes to fit the times, we been breeding criminals. It time we concentrated on dev emotionally stable people. It done. It must be done. RAE M Brooklyn, Feb. 2

Cancer: The Rising Toll

To the Editor:

My letter is prompted by your Feb. 13 editorial ("Statistical Hypochondria") and other recent press discussions of the data on cancer deaths reported by the National Center for Health Statistics for 1975. We feel that one very important point has been overlooked in these discussions, and that is the possibility that a significant acceleration is now developing in the long-term upward trend of cancer mortality.

The increase of 2 or 3 percent in the cancer death rate that is now indicated for 1975 follows directly upon an increase of 1.9 percent for 1974. (In numbers, the 1974 increase meant an additional 9,400 deaths.) For no other two-year period since 1950 has the increase exceeded 3 percent and the average annual increase has been 0.8 percent. Even after making allowance for the rising proportion of older people in our population, we find that the combined increase in the rates for 1974 and 1975 will be the largest in any two-year period of the last 25 years.

Data on deaths by site of the cancer, New York, Feb. 23, 1976

which provide the most meaningful look at cancer mortality, are not yet available for 1975. For 1974, however, the increases in rates for cancer of the respiratory system (4.5 percent) and the large intestine (3.9 percent) were more than twice as high as the 1.9 percent for all cancers. Our provisional 1975 data by cancer site, which will be published in May, should provide additional leads to some of the factors involved in the overall rise in cancer deaths. DOROTHY P. RICE Director, National Center for Health Statistics Rockville, Md., Feb. 28, 1976

To Restore Bus Passes

To the Editor:

If suggestions from the Board of Education for increased bus pass charges had been heeded, bus pass subsidies would be unnecessary and bus passes for schoolchildren need not have been eliminated.

Parents would pay a bus pass charge of $2 to $4 a month, resulting in an income to New York City that would replace today's necessary subsidy.

No child need be denied a bus pass or be made to walk long distances, on unsafe streets, in extreme weather. Excess salaries for Board of Education clerks who check each pass holder's address for legitimacy can be eliminated. Overcrowded lunch rooms, needing more supervision, would have relief.

Bus pass elimination has brought unnecessary hardship to many families. It was a move based on unsound economic reasoning.

Reverse the decision. Parents will pay increased charges. DAVID FUCHS New York, Feb. 23, 1976

Ecology and Freedom: Needless Conflict

To the Editor:

In a recent speech, Dr. Barry Commoner raised the issue of the consistency of freedom and a quality environment. He argued that government has become so powerful that the foundation of our free enterprise system is threatened. Dr. Commoner stressed that no matter how much we as a society value the quality of our environment, realism and candor require recognition that our environmental concerns are resulting in stringent and pervasive limitations on freedom.

He suggested that the fault came from within our profit-motivated economic structure. Others concerned with the usurpment of our freedom of choice personally the bureaucratic organism and suggest that the environmental movement has taken on a life of its own.

I believe that freedom and quality of life are compatible goals, and I object to the assertion that our system of government and the profit incentive are at fault. While I agree that the current approach to controlling environmental pollution through a system of regulations, legal proceedings, injunctions, fines, etc. has resulted in an erosion of freedom, it must be understood that this is an "administration" issue and nothing more.

As long as we insist on using a strategy that restricts the personal choices, we have designed a conflict between environmental preservation and freedom. To resolve this dilemma, we must work cooperatively within our profit-motivated system by employing administrative measures to assure that entrepreneurs' incentives are consistent with broader social goals.

Economists have long argued that "effluent charges," rather than freedom restrictions, present an alternative method for controlling environmental quality. We must assist the market and the entrepreneur by assuring that the social cost of pollution is paid for by the polluter. Such a policy would encourage sound environmental management while not destroying the free enterprise system.

Thus, in answer to Dr. Commoner's concern with growing regulatory infringement upon freedom, I suggest that administrative design is the correct fulcrum for debate. By modifying market incentives, we can assure that our profit-motivated system is compatible with our environmental goals. TERRY A. FERRAR University Park, Pa., Feb. 25, 1976 The writer is director, Center for the Study of Environmental Policy, Pennsylvania State University.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind.—It strikes me as a calamity that when the novel died the American novelist did not die too. It would have saved us time, money, perhaps even a few redwoods.

Norman Mailer would have been spared the mortification he feels about having written but one good novel, and we would have been spared Truman Capote, who has yet to match even Mr. Mailer's scrawny accomplishment.

Further, the great publishing houses could continue to disgorge their trash without any spasms of conscience; that is, they could continue to publish those dreadful nonce editions that always hover about the best-seller list: books of popular luridities, of bogus revelation about the system and the self, of socio-political trash, and that book about an admirable sea gull so steeped in the wisdom of Bertrand Russell that he broke away and became truly his own bird.

It is hard to say who is more responsible for the rubbish publishing houses extrude, the Philistines who publish it or who read it. Generally I would blame the consumer, for as with so many other free-market transactions the consumer's vote elects what is produced. Unfortunately, readers, and for that matter most members of the culturai, are rarely so demanding or so independent as, say, automobile consumers. Rather, readers are generally the most abject slaves of fashion known to man.

The gentle and pliable nature of the reader has been noted forever and anon, and lately he appears even more gullible than in the past. With increasing frequency, readers are the shabby products of our industrial-mill university system. Some graduates are so embittered by the experience that they become lifelong foes of the written word, but, though they are the avowed enemies of writers and readers alike,

'Kiss me,' she cried.

By R. Emmett Tyrrell Jr.

their influence is practically benign compared to that of graduates whose minds have been bedaubed with intellectual pretense and a vague yearning for whiffs of "culture."

Today charlatans are doing a brisk business. Publishers realize that publishing junk is much easier and more lucrative than publishing quality. There are no apparent Faulkners or Hemingways—notwithstanding the thousands of our creative-writing greenhouses—and it is costly and difficult to ferret out talented writers. So publishers turn out poorly edited books written for enthusiasts of the moment. They make them long beyond belief, because it is more profitable.

Television is our dominant pastime, and if a book is to sell it must be written in the form of TV drama or news. It has to be simple, pretentious, nerve-racking. It has to soar ostentatiously on the winds of the Zeitgeist. Hence, the popularity of general-interest books like those of Theodore H. White and all the potboilers about Patty Hearst, etc. Hardly one of these books ever informs readers of anything that the press has not reported. Nonetheless they become publishing events of great moment, and for weeks they sell famously and their authors gab incontinently on talk shows. The same can be said for our works of fiction—all either gimmicky tales like "Ragtime" and that repulsive story of the seagull, or ventures into romantic turpitude.

There is hardly a novelist in America worth reading, and none is capable of sustained quality. I doubt that very many of the books published are ever read. Few are actually read in their entirety. They are carried by secretaries who hope to trap culturally inclined lawyers, or they are purchased by readers for whom the very financial transaction is a kind of cultural fix.

Anyone must tire of reading about the bold, candid, teleological orgasms of Smith-educated princesses or of belle lettres he-man types. Endless recastings of the adventures of Raskolnikov, Madame Bovary and Huckleberry Finn have eventually got to weary even the Book-of-the-Month Club clientele.

What the novel needs is real people sweating it out in credible or interesting conditions. People, not clinical statistics, make novels informative, amusing, engaging, beautiful.

Which suggests another desideratum: Novels can impart a sense of the beautiful. What is beautiful is a complicated question, but I do not think that there is any question that beauty has a great deal to do with art. And here we come to just what contemporary writing lacks most: art. It is too limited. It is pseudo-journalism, sophisticated gossip. But it is not art. Until art returns to writing, books will be hard to take seriously.

Now It's 'Stop Carter'

By Tom Wicker

TAMPA, Fla., March 4—"We've sent them enough messages," Jimmy Carter has been telling Florida voters. "Now let's send them a President."

That none-too-subtle dig at the essential nature of the George Wallace campaign—"Send Them a Message"—was, in fact, the Wallace slogan in the 1972 Florida primary—might have been the key to a Carter victory here this year until the results of the Massachusetts primary transformed the Florida campaign. It had been a "Stop Wallace" effort with Mr. Carter leading the fight. Suddenly, it may be more of a "Stop Carter" effort by Senator Henry Jackson, the Massachusetts winner.

Mr. Carter was doing splendidly in Florida—and still is—with a combination of good organization, widespread personal campaigning, and the remarkable ability he has been demonstrating—as one bemused Florida observer put it—"to appeal in all directions."

"I'm a registered Democrat but in national politics I ordinarily vote Republican," a Florida lawyer with much political experience told me. "I was going to vote for Wallace because I thought he would cause the Democrats the most trouble. Then I heard Carter on television from Miami the other night and I thought, 'By golly, this old boy could win.' So I think I may just vote for him."

To more liberal Democrats who simply opposed Mr. Wallace, moreover, Mr. Carter looked like the only serious alternative, since the third major contestant, Senator Jackson, was a late starter here and was given little chance to win. Hence, many anti-Wallace voters reasoned, a vote for Mr. Jackson or any other Democrat would only hurt Mr. Carter.

But the news from Massachusetts suddenly dispelled Mr. Jackson's reputation as a poor vote-getter and reinvestigated his Florida supporters. His victory made it clear that he and Mr. Carter are the major contenders for the moderate-to-conservative Democratic vote, with Representative Morris Udall of Arizona the liberal leader and Mr. Wallace on the far right.

So some Democrats who preferred Mr. Jackson all along may now vote for him after all, even if that might result in a Wallace victory. Under proportional representation rules, they might well increase Mr. Jackson's delegate strength, deny Mr. Carter a triumph over George Wallace, and give the latter a victory that would do him little practical good—but help Jackson greatly in his struggle with Carter.

Florida political buffs believe Mr. Jackson has a good issue against Mr.

Carter anyway, in the latter's willingness to consider elimination of the income tax deduction for home mortgage interest as a part of a general tax reform. Florida building has been hard hit by the recession, the state's 11 percent unemployment is centered in the building trades, and Mr. Jackson claims that killing the mortgage interest tax reduction would further damage the housing industry. Mr. Jackson also has much strength among South Florida's heavy Jewish population.

Mr. Wallace's third-place finish in what was supposed to be the most liberal of the fifty states might also stir up the tired blood of a Wallace campaign that Florida sources think has been lagging for a number of reasons. An important one is that there is no busing controversy in Florida like the one he seized upon in 1972 to help him carry all 67 counties with 42 percent of the total vote.

Equally important, perhaps, is that few Floridians seem to think that Mr. Wallace, now conducting his fourth national campaign and in a wheelchair, can actually be elected President. His is seen as primarily a protest candidacy, while Mr. Carter—and now Mr. Jackson—are looked upon as real contenders for the Presidency.

George Wallace remains a formidable figure in this conservative Southern state, although many of his 1972 supporters are now working for Mr. Carter. The Alabama Governor still has to be ranked the favorite—although no one expects him to get anything like 42 percent of the vote again. Finishing a close second here—about the worst he could do—will certainly not take him out of the race.

But a Carter victory over Mr. Wallace would be far more menacing to the other major contenders—Mr. Jackson and Representative Udall—and that is why even some liberal Udall supporters might see a Wallace vote as a "stop Carter" vote, although Mr. Udall himself is not campaigning here. The well-heeled Jackson campaign, though only sketchily organized, will surely trumpet the Massachusetts results in a "media blitz."

But Mr. Jackson cannot get the kind of support from organized labor, which is weak in Florida, that he did in Massachusetts, nor the advantage that the Boston busing struggle gave him. Mr. Carter has been campaigning here for more than a year, he has one of the most comprehensive organizations ever seen in this state, and he's a neighbor from Georgia who obviously aims to go in person rather than send them a message. That still might make the difference.

Getting Better Judges

By Robert Abrams

It is beyond dispute that our courts are in serious difficulty. While many complex factors have fueled this crisis, perhaps the most fundamental is the caliber of our judges.

There are certainly a great many able men and women on the bench, but there are too many who lack the required experience, industry, independence and integrity. The present method of selecting judges has resulted in so many unqualified judges reaching the bench that it must be changed.

All too often, the problem of judicial selection gets bogged down in the debate of whether judges should be elected or appointed. However, the present "electoral system," with few exceptions, does not leave the decision in the hands of the voters. Most districts are "safe" one-party districts. Therefore, whoever has the nomination of the majority party is assured of victory at a pro-forma election.

Often there is not even a pretense of giving the voters a choice. Since 1968, more than four-fifths of the 134 New York State Supreme Court judges and almost two-thirds of the 132 Civil Court judges elected in New York City have had both Republican and Democratic endorsements. Thus, in most instances, our judges are selected not by the voters but by a handful of party leaders.

The best way to select judges in New York State would be to implement a version of the "merit-retention" plan first developed in Missouri and now in use in a dozen states. It combines elements of both the appointive and elective systems.

As adapted for New York, such a plan would necessitate a state constitutional amendment creating nonpartisan judicial nominating commissions composed of both lawyers and laymen who would seek out persons who are best qualified to be judges. The commission would recommend the three best candidates to an appointing authority (governor, mayor) who would be required to fill all vacancies exclusively from the names submitted.

The commission would be required to consider nominations from all sources, and could come up with its own candidates. However, the appointing authority would be prohibited from making any nominations, or even making any representations about any candidate to the commission. The commission would have sufficient staff members to conduct full investigations of all prospective appointees.

This proposal differs from others in that it bars the judiciary and the appointing authority from designating the commission.

To obtain an objective and independent commission, I propose that the law school deans in the jurisdiction of a judicial nominating commission should be members and should also appoint other lawyers and leaders of community, civic and social-interest groups to the commission.

After a judge has been appointed and has served for two years, the judge should be subjected to an election in which the voters are asked to vote on whether to retain the judge for the balance of his or her term. In effect, the incumbent judge runs against himself—his own record.

I believe this open process would allow for the selection of qualified candidates without limiting it to those with political or personal influence.

Passage of a state constitutional amendment would take at least three years. Therefore, reforms of the judicial selection system that could be implemented at once are essential.

Although state Supreme Court judges are theoretically elected, nominations are made not at the polls in a primary but at judicial conventions run by the political parties. Since it is virtually impossible to wrest control of these conventions from the party leaders, the convention system results in most Supreme Court judges being chosen in the smoke-filled rooms.

These deals could be prevented (until the adoption of the "merit-retention" system) if Supreme Court judges were nominated at primaries rather than conventions. Primaries serve to provide the voters with a choice in districts that are dominated by one or the other party in the general election. The Legislature should act swiftly to enact a law mandating primaries for judicial selection. Many of the judges elected in the next three years will be on the bench for the better part of a generation. We should do our utmost to insure the selection of judges who will be part of a solution to the crisis in our court system rather than part of the problem.

Robert Abrams, borough president of the Bronx, was the Democratic Party's candidate for New York State Attorney General in 1974.

Freedom is everybody's right

No matter how many disclaimers we inject into this statement, we're afraid it's going to outrage some people. Some won't understand what we are talking about, because from their point of view, most reporting is essentially accurate and most editorials are fair.

Another reason we may be misunderstood is that some members of the working press feel that businessmen almost invariably exaggerate the damage done by inaccurate reporting (or of no coverage at all), overreact to critical editorials, and actually want to control the press, for their own sinister purposes.

Well, we don't want to control the press. But we do believe a way should be found to provide adequate, timely, and economic channels of communication whereby individuals and organizations can correct demonstrably inaccurate reporting or editorials. While some newspapers have mechanisms that they consider adequate, we believe there is room for substantial improvement.

We believe a system can be found that does not do violence to the First Amendment. We believe, above all, that it should be developed by the press itself, voluntarily. In urging this evolutionary step, we hasten to add that we consider American newspapers among the best in the world. We think what we are suggesting here would make them even better.

In our experience, materials provided by companies or individuals in the form of news releases, speeches, White Papers, special studies, and other documents, or even in face-to-face briefings, have not proved to be the answer, because of the selective use of such materials.

Nor do letters to the editor do the job. Few of them get printed, and even the small proportion of them that are printed invariably fail to get the coverage the original, damaging article got. They appear long after the offending article or editorial has done its damage. Finally, the newspapers usually impose severe limitations on the length of such letters.

Thus some companies and individuals have more than once felt impelled to buy advertising space to try to correct what they considered inaccurate reporting or editorials. But who could afford the amount of paid advertising required to rebut an inaccurate article that might have appeared in several hundred newspapers? Moreover, this raises a larger issue: What about the organizations and individuals who cannot afford to buy any advertising space to try to set the record straight?

The situation with respect to the nationwide commercial television and radio networks is worse. They have no equivalent of the letter to the editor.

We recognize that the structure of TV and radio news and documentaries is not satisfactory for handling complex material or long stories. But that is no justification for failing to provide suitable access for correction of errors caused by this structure. Moreover, networks have refused to sell time for others to present information or viewpoints on any subject the networks decide is controversial.

We would hope the press (both electronic and print) would have the enlightened self-interest to see the importance of some adequate mechanism if we are indeed to have freedom of the press and not just freedom for the press. And we would hope the press will be astute enough to develop such a mechanism itself, since it would be far superior to other recourses available, such as the libel law.

Many other democracies around the world, in an effort to alleviate this problem, have enacted legislation requiring some form of access for rebuttals. These include Denmark, France, Italy, Belgium, West Germany, Austria, and Norway. We are not urging such legislation. On the contrary, we are urging the development of a voluntary mechanism, developed by the press, which would promote free and robust debate.

We say again: We believe it is in the interest of the press and of the American people that some system of access be established so that one of the world's freest presses can be even better. We don't have all the answers. We think they should come as the result of open-minded experimentation by the press, and we hope that this message constitutes a responsible attempt to stimulate such experimentation.

It seems to us that the demise of so many newspapers across the country in recent years places on the surviving newspapers an even greater responsibility in this respect.

For a case study on this subject, see our full-page message on the back page of today's paper.

Tar/Taste Theory Exploded.

New 9 mg. tar MERIT with 'Enriched Flavor' prove taste no longer depends on amount of tar.

Until today, cigarette flavor pretty much depended on the amount of tar that went along with it.

Regardless of "low tar, good taste" claims, regardless of fancy-filters and "space-age" filtering systems—you couldn't get high taste without high tar.

Nor low tar without low taste.

That was the theory.

Until today.

By isolating certain "key" ingredients of tobacco in cigarette smoke, ingredients that deliver taste way out of proportion to tar, researchers at Philip Morris have developed an 'Enriched Flavor' process so successful at boosting flavor, the resulting cigarette actually delivers as much—or more—taste than brands having more tar.

Up to 60% more tar.

The cigarette is 9 mg. tar MERIT. One of the lowest tar levels in smoking today.

If you smoke—you'll be interested.

Taste-Tested By People Like You

9 mg. tar MERIT was taste-tested against five current leading low tar cigarette brands ranging from 11 mg. to 15 mg. tar. Thousands of filter smokers were involved, smokers like yourself—all tested at home.*

Even if the cigarette tested had 60% more tar than MERIT, a significant majority of all smokers tested reported new 'Enriched Flavor' MERIT delivered more taste.

Repeat: delivered more taste.

In similar tests against 11 mg. to 15 mg. menthol brands, 9 mg. tar MERIT MENTHOL performed strongly, too, delivering as much—or more—taste than the higher tar brands tested.

You've been smoking "low tar, good taste" claims long enough. Now smoke the cigarette.

MERIT. Unprecedented flavor at 9 mg. tar.

An Odd Couple on Capitol Hill: Daughter Of the Bronx and Well-Bred Jersey Lady

By MARTIN TOLCHIN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 4—One is a woman of 36, the daughter of a banker-ambassador, on dress from New Jersey's fashionable...

Representative Bella S. Abzug, left, talking with Representative Millicent H. Fenwick in the Congresswoman's Reading Room

sponsored by the Washington Press Club. She had told them of a debate on the Equal Rights Amendment in the New Jersey Legislature...

Mrs. Fenwick had responded that that was exactly how she had always felt about men...

"I love what she said that night," Mrs. Abzug recalled. "I went up to her and said, 'You know, everyone expected you to be an uptight dowager.'"

Mrs. Fenwick says of that meeting: "The moment we saw each other, we recognized something in each other. We knew we were friends."

A few weeks later, when Mrs. Fenwick made her first speech on the House floor, there was Bella, sitting next to Tip O'Neill...

Some months later Mrs. Fenwick more than returned the favor when Mrs. Abzug again offered an amendment to the Arms Control Act...

The proposal was attacked by some House conservatives, and Mrs. Fenwick, who spends a great deal of time observing floor debates...

"Could I ask the gentlewoman from New York whether it will be satisfactory if the amendment reads 'up to $1 million'?" Mrs. Fenwick asked.

Mrs. Abzug replied: "That will be fine. 'Not to exceed $1 million.' I just want to point out this is $1 million and we are spending billions of dollars; my God, we have $104 billion in the weapons program."

Mrs. Fenwick interjected that "a million dollars is a lot of money," and Mrs. Abzug again said she would accept Mrs. Fenwick's compromise. It was substituted by unanimous consent...

Like most friendships, however, the Fenwick-Abzug relationship has had its testier moments, the testiest of which occurred when the two

They are an odd couple who seek out each other's company, try to ease each other's paths and provide moral support, solace, humor and...

The Genuine Article? do they see in each other? "It's for real—she's the genuine article," Mrs. Fenwick said during a recent luncheon...

Native Norwich Is Ignoring Benedict Arnold

By MICHAEL KNIGHT

Special to The New York Times

DRWICH, Conn., March 4—Like a prophet without a kingdom, Benedict Arnold was both hero and traitor of the American Revolution...

While other New Englanders trumpet the exploits of their patriots in Bicentennial year, Norwich has decided in quiet, unobtrusive fashion to let the story of its Revolutionary War figure pass...

What can you do when it's your own history you're talking about? Mrs. O'Keefe said. "It wouldn't go down too well—he's still too controversial and hated here."

Had the general who helped capture Fort Mifflin, shared in an almost successful attempt to seize Quebec and deserved much of the glory for turning the tide at the Battle of Saratoga...

But he turned traitor in his attempt to sell to the enemy the plans for West Point and later led a British raiding party in the burning of nearby New London and Groton. He thus became the nation's greatest symbol of treachery and Norwich's everlasting shame.

Arnold Place. But it would be vandalized immediately. "If only he'd gotten killed before going bad," she continued. "Then we'd have a hero and it would all be so much easier."

Even the Arnold buffs in town—there are a few who brazenly argue that the man was not all bad and deserves recognition for his positive accomplishments—are leery of proposing any sort of celebration or memorial this year.

was celebrating its 300th anniversary. The two men convinced Philip Johnson, the president of the Society of the Founders of Norwich...

"Even today," he said, "you can look at his birth records at City Hall and next to his name somebody has penciled in 'the traitor.' And every family gravestone but that of his mother was destroyed."

Revisionist Failed

About three years ago, Dr. Vincent A. Lindner, a history lecturer in Scotch Plains, N.J., petitioned the Army to re-examine Arnold's court-martial conviction in December 1779...

On Oct. 24, 1973, the Army Board of Correction of Military Records denied the request for a hearing, holding that there was insufficient evidence to warrant it.

PETER B. YATES, 66, WRITER ON MUSIC

Organizer of Contemporary Series on Coast Dies

By JOHN ROCKWELL

Peter B. Yates, who organized contemporary-music series in Los Angeles and was a writer in music, died Feb. 25 after a heart attack in his home. He was 66 years old.

Mr. Yates worked for the California Department of Employment from 1937 to 1962. He was always involved with music and counted many important composers among his friends.

After retiring as director of the series in 1964, Mr. Yates continued as music critic for a West Coast magazine, Arts and Architecture, and wrote several books.

Dr. Joseph J. Drago, M.D., Physician in Queens

Dr. Joseph J. Drago, medical director and former president of the board of directors of Astoria General Hospital, died yesterday at Newark, N.J.

A physician and surgeon in Astoria for nearly 50 years, Dr. Drago was a founder of the Queens hospital in 1949 and a moving force in its growth from a 100-bed, 3 three-story building to its present 235-bed, six-story structure.

Dr. Drago instituted several preventive-medicine programs including a cancer-detection clinic, where he personally examined thousands of people.

A former president of the Long Island City Medical Society, and a fellow of the International College of Surgeons, he received a B.S. degree from Columbia College and an M.D. degree from the George Washington University hospital in Washington.

Surviving are his wife, the former Myrta Nocton; two sons, Joseph Jr. and Rosario; a daughter, Bernadette and Agripina, and five grandchildren.

Layle Lane, a civil-rights leader for more than three decades and a former vice president of the American Federation of Teachers, died Feb. 27 in Cuernavaca, Mexico. She was 78 years old.

Miss Lane was active in social movements in Harlem from the 1930's to the mid-50's, when she returned from the school system and went to live in Mexico. She had run a summer camp or poor black children on an arm she owned near Doylesown, Pa. She also served on the National Committee for Rural Schools and the national executive board of the Workers Defense League.

Ray Gilbert, Song Writer, Dead; Won 'Zip-a-Dee-Doo-Dah' Oscar

LOS ANGELES, March 4 (UPI)—Ray Gilbert, the composer and song writer who won an Academy Award for best song in 1947 for "Zip-a-Dee-Doo-Dah" in Walt Disney's movie "Song of the South," died yesterday at the University of California medical center here after heart surgery. He was 63 years old.

Surviving are his wife, the actress Janis Paige, and a daughter, Joanne Gilbert, a singer.

"Zip-a-Dee-Doo-Dah" was a highlight of the 1946 film "Song of the South," which was based on the fictional character "Uncle Remus" stories. The cheery, carefree song was sung by the fabbed Brer Rabbit.

Two other songs by Ray Gilbert, "All the Cats Join In" and "Without You" were featured in "Make Mine Music" another featurelength Disney cartoon released in 1946.

Other works by the song writer included "The Hot Canary," "The Three Caballeros," "You Belong to My Heart," "Two Silhouettes," "Sommer Later," "My Fiddlele El" and "Everybody Has a Laughing Place."

Before going to Hollywood, the songwriter wrote special material for nightclub and stage performers, including Sophie Tucker, Harry Richman and Buddy Rogers. He also contributed to Earl Carroll productions.

Mr. Gilbert was born in Hartford and educated in public schools in Chicago.

Dr. M. Richard Altchek, Internist, 54, Dead; Heart-Lung Expert

Dr. M. Richard Altchek, an internist who specialized in heart and lung diseases, died of leukemia Wednesday night at Beth Israel Hospital. He was 54 years old and lived at 135 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn.

Dr. Altchek was a staff physician at the hospital and medical center for the last 18 years and had a private practice on the lower East Side, where he had lived most of his life.

He was held in high esteem by both colleagues and patients, many of whom yesterday extolled his "humane ideals," "compassion and concern."

Grateful patients included sportswriters who had given him honorary membership in the New York Turf Writers Association.

Dr. Altchek received B.S. and M.S. degrees from Queens College and an M.D. degree from the Middlesex University School of Medicine in Waltham, Mass.

For nearly 15 years he was a physician in the New York National Guard, retiring as a lieutenant colonel. He was a Mason, a fellow of the American College of Cardiology and a member of many other professional organizations.

the Broadway Association, says that Mr. Baumgarten has accused him of abetting the porno operation. Mr. Baumgarten denies this. Mr. Durst also says that the city is dragging its feet in helping him. Mr. Baumgarten denies this, too.

No one seems to know who is running the operation or how the porno merchants took over.

Last year Mr. Durst leased the building to a company called Astro Development Corporation. He said it was an "oral lease" on a month-to-month basis.

He said that Astro wanted to convert the entire building into a legal health club and that it fixed the swimming pool and gymnasium and renovated the second floor. The company, he said, ran out of money and the agreement with Astro was terminated as of Jan. 31.

"We were going to give Astro a written lease if they could get the place in operation," he said. "The Astro people must have let in the porno people. We hear that Astro turned over its stock, or a portion of its stock, to the present occupants."

Clue to Occupants

Mr. Baumgarten's group is not certain who the present operators are. One clue, however, is a certificate from the city posted on the sixth floor that is made out to the Bet Stars Corporation, of which Peter Vicedomini and his mother, Betty Vicedomini, are said to be officers. Mr. Baumgarten said this company owned other massage parlors.

Mr. Baumgarten and his chief investigator, William Daly, say they have heard rumors from good sources that the real power behind the Luxor operation has become James Ragonese, who is believed by Mr. Baumgarten to be an important figure in the porno operations of organized crime.

The porno operators have defied stop-work orders issued by the city.

Early in February, the city issued a stop-work order after city inspectors visited the premises. Although there was no advance warning of the visit, workers were able to flee the premises without being seen. They left tools behind.

On Feb. 24, an inspector from the Building Department returned to the Luxor and found that work had continued.

"These people just kept right on going," said Mr. Baumgarten.

The city agency got a search warrant, and last week a police photographer made pictures of cubicles obviously used for massage and probably for prostitution.

Mr. Baumgarten suggested that Mr. Durst's company go into Criminal Court and charge the operators with trespass.

Arrests Promised

"If we get an affidavit of trespass," he said, "we will arrest anyone in the building."

As far back as Dec. 23 the Durst Organization urged the Fire Department to charge the building with violations because there was no water in the sprinkler system. The following day the Fire Department put five violations on the building, including one for the sprinkler system.

On Feb. 20, firemen checked and found that the violations had not been corrected. They issued a summons to a woman named Corey Davidson, the only person they could find. It is returnable on March 25 in Criminal Court.

On Feb. 23, representatives of the city's Departments of Health, Buildings and Public Works accompanied a representative of the Fire Department to the Luxor. They found that work was being done but were unable to catch any workers.

Mr. Durst said he was not surprised at this defiance of the city's orders.

"These people who have taken over my building are not concerned about laws any more than they care about leases," he said.

Yesterday morning a reporter, with a letter from the owner authorizing him to visit the premises, was told to leave. Then the general manager of the Brick Management Corporation, which manages the property for the Durst Organization, was curtly ordered out of the lobby.

The manager, Tom Downey, said this had happened several times since he began seeing young women in the lobby, sometimes as many as 15.

"This was supposed to become a legal health club," he said. "I don't know what it is now. I'm not allowed to see."

City Refuses to Lease Site For a 2d Ave. Shop Plaza

By GLENN FOWLER

Responding to vociferous protests of city businessmen and residents who work or live near Second Avenue and 59th Street, the Board of Estimate refused yesterday to approve the leasing of a strip of city-owned land there to a developer for the construction of a $2 million complex of food shops, boutiques and movie theaters.

However, the developer, Lowell Harwood, said he would go ahead with plans to build a scaled-down version of the project on adjacent property that he owns.

Under existing zoning, he is permitted to erect a smaller project, with similar facilities at a cost of $1.2 million without further zoning approval.

The rejection of the lease proposal was a sharp reversal for the City Planning Commission, which had helped to prepare the Architectural Plans and had obtained Mr. Harwood's commitment to include, as part of the plan, an 8,000-square-foot open plaza opposite a roadway leading to the Queensboro Bridge.

Congestion Foreseen

A score of community representatives, most of them proprietors of fashionable shops or spokesmen for business groups, were backed by a phalanx of local elected officials when they urged the Board of Estimate to vote down the lease during a three-hour public hearing in City Hall.

They argued that their already congested streets would be impossibly constricted by pedestrian and vehicular traffic drawn by the shops, that the area was already saturated with 11 movie houses and that customers of the food shops would create unmanageable litter problems.

Mr. Harwood owns 11,000 square feet adjoining the unused city parcel of 13,000 square feet, which runs back 65 feet from the west block-front of Second Avenue. He sought to rent the city parcel for $10,000 a year.

The city strip was condemned 13 years ago for what was to have been a vehicular underpass for traffic leaving the Queensboro Bridge. That project was abandoned, mainly because it would have interfered with the Second Avenue subway, itself now in limbo.

Planners Cooperated

City planners and economic development officials had enthusiastically cooperated when Mr. Harwood approached them for the additional land, helping to produce what they thought would be a project far superior to what the developer could build on the parcel he owned.

Opposition developed in the neighborhood, however, and the controversy was fanned when Community Board Six, whose jurisdiction extends north on the East Side to 58th Street, approved the concept of the project. Community Board 8, on whose border the complex would have been built, was firmly opposed to it. Six weeks ago Board 8 changed its position and called for further study.

After yesterday's vote, in which the Board of Estimate directed the city's Department of Real Estate to find an alternative use for the city-owned strip, Mr. Harwood said he intended to proceed immediately with his smaller project, which will have the same amount of space for food shops but less for selling fashions, antiques and jewelry. It will include two movie theaters, each with 400 seats, the same as had been planned for the larger project.

Parish Protests Loss of Monks

By ELEANOR BLAU

Alarmed over what they view as the possible ruin of their close and civically active community, more than 50 members of a Bronx Roman Catholic parish are flying to Minneapolis today to try to persuade a Benedictine abbot not to recall four monks who have been serving the church.

"The Benedictines have been the catalyst that has drawn this community together, especially in the last dozen years," said Peter Lana, one of the leaders of the protest.

Members of the church, St. Benedict's in the Thruway Neck-Pelham Bay section, assert that it is one of the most progressive in the city. It is active in social causes that affect non-Catholics as well as the 4,500 families who are members of St. Benedict's, they say. It has an innovative school and, long before many other churches, promulgated reforms urged by Vatican II.

The parishioners fear that if the parish is turned over to the New York Archdiocese, new priests assigned to St. Benedict's are not likely to be as progressive, particularly toward liberal liturgies and extensive lay involvement in decision-making.

The parish has been under the auspices of St. John's Abbey in Collegeville, near Minneapolis, since its founding 53 years ago. Because of a personnel shortage, the monks are being called home, ending the order's association with the parish.

However, the archdiocese—which would assume responsibility for the parish—has a staffing problem too, and hopes the parishioners will succeed in having the monks stay. On the other hand, a diocesan spokesman explained, it will provide priests for St. Benedict's if the abbot finds he cannot alter the decision, which was voted by monks at the abbey last month. In that case, the spokesman said, parishioners would be consulted about possibilities for replacing the monks. One alternative might be to invite another order to step in.

Caught in the middle of the crisis is the Rev. Brennan Maers, pastor of St. Benedict's. "I really feel bad for them," said Father Brennan, describing as "reasonable" the parishioners' concern about retaining their decision-making role. On the other hand, he said, the abbey has severe problems.

The abbot, the Rev. John Eidenschink, says he doubts the decision can be altered, but is willing to listen to the delegation. Parishioners hope at least to postpone the monks' departure. "We're buying time," Mr. Lana said.

4 Is Double Lucky for Lottery Winner

The number 4 proved lucky again for Harold J. Mubs yesterday as the 69-year-old retired bartender from Trenton won the New Jersey weekly lottery's Jersey Jackpot $250,000 prize. On Jan. 4, 1973, Mr. Mubs won the top prize of $50,000 in the old weekly lottery. And yesterday, March 4, he won $25,000 a year for the next 10 years. In the final drawing, in South Plainfield, N. J., Mr. Mubs drew Post Position 4.

Indictment of Mayor Quashed

The Appellate Division of New Jersey Superior Court in Trenton threw out the bribery indictment of Mayor William S. Hart Sr. of East Orange because the assistant prosecutor in the case told the grand jury the Mayor had lied to the panel. Mr. Hart was accused of bribery and misconduct in office in an indictment returned last Nov. 5.

Gould Granddaughter Ruled a Citizen

The United States Court of Appeals here has ruled that the late Dorothy Gould Burns, granddaughter of Jay Gould, the railroad baron, was an American citizen when she died in 1969, even though she had become a citizen of Switzerland and Mexico through marriages. The three-judge panel found unanimously that Mrs. Burns' tax returns and passport papers listed her citizenship as American and that she thus had dual citizenship. The ruling is expected to affect a Federal suit seeking $3.28 million in taxes on her $6.2 million estate.

Landmark Hotel Faces Demise in Atlantic City

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTIC CITY, March 4—The Ambassador Hotel, the resort's second-largest, faces demolition after being idle for the last nine years.

Rudolph J. Bushell, vice president of Albert M. Greenfield and Company, a real estate agency that is the local representative for the hotel's owner, Mutual of New York, said today that he had turned over a report and demolition estimates to Mutual and that the owner was expected to make its final decision soon on the Ambassador's future.

The report, according to Mr. Bushell, cites the hotel's annual tax burden of $100,000, which is due to rise sharply this year, along with the rapid deterioration of the building and a lack of potential buyers, even for the vast tract of land on which he hotel stands.

With 634 rooms, the Ambassador on Brighton Avenue and the Boardwalk, is second in size only to the 1,000-room Chalfonte Haddon Hall. If the hotel is destroyed, as expected, it will further disrupt a Boardwalk skyline already torn apart in the last few years by the demolition of the Traymore, the St. Charles and the Breakers.

Once known as the monarch of the Boardwalk, the hotel was sold at auction to Mutual in 1971 for its first mortgage of $600,000 and $784,973 in taxes owed to the city.

It once was the favorite summer vacation home of Enrico Caruso, Fanny Brice and Paul Whiteman, among others, and its guests included Gen. John J. Pershing and President Warren G. Harding. The 13-story Ambassador was built in 1919 with 200 rooms. Two years later, 400 rooms were added.

Yunich Sees Transit Increase Unless 4 Conditions Are Met

David L. Yunich raised the specter of another transit-fare increase yesterday, saying four conditions must be met this year, including a $45 million loan and continuation of the "constrains of the existing Wage freeze."

In a luncheon talk to the New York City Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Mr. Yunich, chairman of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, said: "Transit system throughout the nation face the same basic problem: finances." "Reducing expenses is precisely the course I have followed since coming on board," he added. "However, transit problems cannot be solved merely by cost efficiencies and better management."

A fundamental problem, he said, is keeping costs—especially wage costs—from continuing their growth at a rate far above the present norm for inflation.

The four conditions cited by Mr. Yunich to maintain the 50-cent fare for the remainder of the year were obtaining the $316.3 million in expected fiscal, state and Federal operating subsidies; obtaining the $45 million loan from the state in June "for a few months" to overcome a "cash flow gap"; achieving a projected $100 million in cost cuts, and obtaining a new wage contract "within the constraints of the existing wage freeze, and with improvements in work rules and productivity."

The next problem, he added, is to get enough legislators "awake of the necessity for definite, stable and adequate regional funding needed to keep public transportation operating"—that is, to approve a broad-based regional tax.

Strikes Two Bus Companies in Hudson County

March 4 — The Hudson County bus company's contract offer was rejected by the union, and the company's contract offer was rejected by the union, and the company's contract offer was rejected by the union.

Transit Union against the Hudson Bus Transportation Company of Jersey City and the North Boulevard Transportation Company of North Bergen surprised company officials.

The union walkout caused a problem for homework-bound commuters, including 3,000 riders of the Hudson Bus Company's Route 90 and Route 995, which carry commuters from Manhattan to Journal Square in Jersey City and then south to Bayonne and Staten Island.

The North Boulevard Company carries commuters between Jersey City and Newark.

York City and between Fort Lee and New York. The Hudson Bus Company employs about 100 union drivers, clerks and maintenance workers, and North Boulevard Transportation, about 75.

Mr. Serrano said he was unable to get negotiators for the union or Transport of New Jersey to alter their positions during the latest bargaining session.

"We tried to move the union and the company to a mutual meeting ground, but neither side showed a willingness to do so," he said.

Sale Success (If Too Late) for Grant

By STEVEN RATTNER
Special to The New York Times
CLARK, N. J., March 4— "Which way to the Grant's store?" laughed the toll collector on the Garden State Parkway. "Just keep going straight until you hit the traffic."

Such sales were under way at 155 Grant's stores around the country as the 70-year-old chain, which once counted 1,200 stores and $1.8 billion in sales, began its final closedown. The company is being physically dismantled. When the sales end March 26, there will be no more Grant's, no more work for its employees, and no tenant for the 12-year-old building here.

But today, the melee on Center Avenue here was the biggest show in town—two-hour traffic jams, parked cars that stretched for a mile, and lines of people almost as long just to get inside. The town's police, fire and civil defense squads were out in force.

The more intrepid customers found the discounts of 25 percent and up worthwhile. Sheets and towels went quickly. Housewares of all sorts were popular. But mainly the throngs just bought—as much as $400 in some cases. Yuo name it, they're buying it," offered Lillian Venzio, a bagger on one of the 24 busy checkout lines. "You wonder where all the money's coming from."

G.T.E. DISCLOSES PAYMENTS ABROAD

By CLARE M. RECKERT
The General Telephone and Electronics Corporation disclosed yesterday that some of its employees appeared to have made payments totaling $2.21 million to foreign government officials over a five-year period. The company, whose subsidiaries operate the nation's largest independent telephone system, reported to the Securities and Exchange Commission that a four-man audit committee consisting of outside board members, found that company personnel had entered into contracts with "most typically commission-compensated marketing organizations or sales agents, with awareness of the possibility that some portion of the sums to be paid them by the company might be passed on to officials of a government-owned or private customer."

Lockheed Reported Barring Inspection By G.A.O. of Data

WASHINGTON, March 4—The Lockheed Aircraft Corporation has refused to allow the General Accounting Office to inspect its records relating to foreign payments, even though the G.A.O., as the Congressional investigative agency, is required by law to "make a detailed audit of all accounts" of the aircraft company. According to a source who has access to the letter, the Comptroller General, Elmer B. Staats, wrote the company Tuesday that its "refusal to provide access to Lockheed's records is unacceptable."

A Price War in Steel Cans Appears to Be Developing

By GENE SMITH
A "price war" of sorts appears to be breaking out in the beer and beverage container industry. The National Steel Corporation said yesterday that it was "competitive" with the "promotional allowances" on similar products offered by other producers. This growing series of "allowances" was begun last month by National when it announced a program of discounts on its steel that is used in the manufacture of beverage cans.

On Feb. 17, the United States Steel Corporation said that it would give its customers "incentives" in the prices paid for steel products used in the manufacture of cans for beer and carbonated beverages. United States Steel set "a development incentive of $1.50 per 1,000 cans" in an effort to advance technological develop-

McCloy Scores U.S. for Failing to Act On Politicians Accepting Illegal Funds

By MICHAEL C. JENSEN
The failure of the United States Government to prosecute or even condemn American politicians who have received illegal political contributions from corporations is unfair and hypocritical, according to John J. McCloy, a prominent New York lawyer who recently conducted an investigation into the Gulf Oil Corporation's illegal political activities.

Policy Held Unfair and Hypocritical

"The statement I didn't know these were corporate funds" doesn't wash when you're talking about cash in sealed envelopes," he said. "Why is it that the people who are offenders in terms of corporate money received can hold themselves out as able to become the President of the United States?"

U.S. Money Supply Shows a Big Drop

'Moonlight' Trades Spur Rebound by Treasury Issues
By JOHN H. ALLAN
The Government securities market perked up late yesterday afternoon in response to news that the nation's money supply had declined $2 billion. The implication of the drop was that the Federal Reserve would not raise interest rates on overnight loans in the banking system above the 4 1/2 to 5 1/2 percent range that many money market economists now assume the central bank wants to see in effect.

Short-Term Rates of Interest Climb Across Board

The nation's money supply dropped sharply in the week ended Feb. 25, the Federal Reserve System reported yesterday. The narrowly defined money supply (M-1) took a steep $2 billion decline. At the same time, the broadly defined money supply (M-2) declined by $1.4 billion.

Egypt Signs an Oil Pact With Chevron

CAIRO, March 4 (Reuters)—Egypt today signed its 31st oil-exploration agreement within 18 months and Petroleum Minister Ezzedin Hilal forecast that by 1980 Egypt would be producing one million barrels of crude oil a day.

The accord with the Chevron Oil Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company of California, signed by the minister and J. T. Scullenberg, the company's resident manager, covered an area of about 300 square miles in Geniza, on the west bank of the Gulf of Suez.

Venezuelan Oil Price Rise Is Reported

CARACAS, Venezuela, March 4 (UPI)—Venezuela's state oil monopoly, Petroven, has decided to increase its prices by around 5 cents a barrel in response to improvement in world prices, official sources reported today.

The increase will basically affect fuel oil and medium crudes, according to a Petroven spokesman who explained that the average price for the state monopoly's exports of 1.8 million barrels a day would increase by around 5.5 cents a barrel to an average of a little more than $11. "Fuel oil prices have improved a bit and our increase is in line with world price levels at present," the source explained.

WHOLESALE INDEX FELL IN FEBRUARY

the inflation picture, as measured by the Wholesale Price Index, reflects three main factors:

Last year's bountiful harvest. Meat and poultry prices are beginning to reflect the much lower prices for feed grains resulting from the harvest.

The virtual cessation, at last, of the steep rise in energy prices. Oil prices actually declined last month, largely because of the price-control provisions of the new energy law signed by President Ford in December, and the removal of the special $2-in-a-barrel fee on oil imports.

Continued price weakness in many other nonagricultural commodities as a result of last year's recession in the industrial countries.

The unadjusted Wholesale Price Index in February stood at 179.4 of the 1967 average of 100, meaning it cost $179.40 last month to buy at wholesale what would have cost $110 in 1967.

Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, said today's report was "further confirmation of what the President and other Administration people have been saying about the progress being made against inflation."

Food Stability Expected

Perhaps the most politically important aspect of today's index was in the food sector. The part of the index that records wholesale prices of finished consumer foods—ready for sale to the supermarkets—declined by 1.9 percent, and this was the fourth consecutive monthly drop. Retail prices began to reflect this wholesale drop for the first time in the January Consumer Price Index.

It is generally agreed that consumers—and voters—are most sensitive to food prices. The trend of wholesale prices indicates what Mr. Greenspan termed today "general stability" of food prices in the stores in the months ahead.

Apart from food, the index for all other finished consumer goods rose only one-tenth of 1 percent in February, the smallest increase in a year. In December and January, the larger than that in the six preceding months.

On the price front, Mr. Greenspan said there was "no evidence of any acceleration in prices, and we don't expect to see any in the time ahead."

Lumber Index Up Again

Nonetheless, the February index continued to reflect a wide variety of price increases in the industrial part of the economy. The index for lumber and notes, unlike the amazing 3 percent seven-year notes that attracted $28.2 billion of orders, had generated little enthusiasm earlier this week. With the pickup in the market late yesterday, dealers predicted the new notes would yield about 7.55 percent, a rate well above the 7.16 percent or so that was available on four-year Treasury issues in the secondary market in the middle of last week.

The Federal Reserve did not enter the market at all yesterday. At its weekly news conference, the Fed reported that the average rate on Federal funds, which are overnight loans of the reserves that the banks must legally hold, rose to 4.95 percent in the week ended Wednesday from 4.80 percent a week earlier.

A consensus seemed to develop among many money market economists that the Fed would like to see this rate range from 4 1/2 to 5 1/2 percent for a while. In coming weeks the rate likely will be nudged up to a 5-to-5 1/2 percent range, but the Fed will be in no particular rush to get there, some suggested.

Long-Term Prices Dip

Other short-term rates scale upward from the funds rate, and so they should rise gradually, too. Some money-market analysts predicted that the prime rate on banks' commercial loans would be raised from its present 6 1/2 percent later this month.

In the long-term fixed-income markets, meanwhile, prices continued to drift downward in light trading. The corporate bond market's financing schedule continued to see a substantial volume of new issues registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission for sale to investors relatively soon.

a private company airline golf courses, hospitals and luxury housing developments all across Indonesia, with Pertamina money at first and then, increasingly, Pertamina loans that began to be backed more and more by General Sutowo's reputation and word than by anything that was being formed from the ground.

This worked well as long as the world money and oil booms continued through the late 1960's and into the early 70's. But less than two years ago, the bubble burst as bank after bank began refusing to roll over large amounts of short-term paper and default became a real threat.

It was then—in 1974—that the first rumors began to circulate that "General Ibnu," as he was known, might be on the way out.

Detailed Audits Ordered

Instead, President Suharto ordered the technocrats—a group of top-level government officials with solid economic, financial and technical backgrounds—to begin detailed audits of the company, uncover the scope of the difficulties and set Pertamina back on the right track.

For the last two years, these technocrats have worked to remove General Sutowo, who, despite his difficulties, retained a solid power base in the military, which is still very much in control in Indonesia.

Their appearance succeeded yesterday. Western oil company officials reached from here today were privately pleased by the general's replacement—though they conceded that for at least six months he had had little to do with the daily operation of the corporation.

The volume of trading in all issues listed on the Big Board, including transactions on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter or "third" market, declined slightly to 28.34 million shares from 29.64 million shares.

Skaggs Companies, a retail drugstore chain, fell more than 1/2 point after disclosing plans for a public offering of one million shares...

Mr. Batzen said that no action had yet been taken on recommendations to create competing specialists or competing market makers. He said that this was easier to describe than to carry out.

The purchase followed the decision by Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., Carlsile's former customer, to eliminate an extra fee that investors pay on small orders and to deprive Carlsile of part of that business.

The Big Board's chairman stated that its directors had decided not to operate the Monthly Investment Plan now handled by Carlsile for 17,000 small investors. Brokers would have to decide individually how to handle them.

Mr. Needham said that the exchange "had no control" over the charge that specialists may make to member firms. He explained that, effective May 1, under a year-old ruling of the Securities and Exchange Commission, fixed commission rates that floor brokers charge other members must be eliminated...

The exchange's proposed capital rule changes now will make it possible for traders and floor brokers to go public, as retail brokers are permitted to do.

E.C. Names Advisory Chief

Securities and Exchange Commission announced today the appointment of John J. Scanlon as chief of the National Advisory Board on Securities.

Lord Shawcross, who is one of Britain's leading attorneys, served as the chief British prosecutor at the Nuremberg war-crimes trials of Nazi leaders.

for promoting ethical practices by companies dealing with government officials. "Bad numbers," by which he meant imprecise or inaccurate statistics, from Government officials or agencies, including the Federal Trade Commission, were assailed here yesterday by Ira M. Millstein, adjunct professor of law at New York University at an anti-trust conference.

Mr. Millstein, a member of the New York law firm of Weil, Gotshal & Manges, traced the course of an $80 billion "ifty" estimate through various perignations in a footnote in a book, into the Congressional Record and later way stations.

Mr. Millstein, an antitrust specialist, added: "The business community can never catch up with 'bad numbers.' They continue to show up. The business community doesn't have the access to the press," he continued, noting what he viewed as the difficulty in trying to "catch up" with, to correct, clarify or at least establish the origin of a particular number circulated by a Government agency or official.

Mr. Millstein was a luncheon panelist at The Conference Board's annual one-day conference on antitrust issues at the Waldorf-Astoria.

STORES' SALES UP FOR CITY AND AREA

Continued Strength Shown for February Results

Retail sales in New York City and the metropolitan area continued to show strength in February according to a spot check yesterday. Department stores in the city topped the year-earlier month by 4.5 percent, while department stores in the metropolitan area showed a gain of 7 percent.

In January the seven major department store organizations achieved an increase of 3.5 percent in the city and an increase of 7.7 percent in the area. In February 1975 the city stores showed a loss of 4.2 percent, while those in the area gained 1.6 percent compared with February in the previous year.

Sale Success (If Too Late) for Grant

Continued From Page 39 sets and the like—that were ordered last fall when the store's future appeared brighter. A number of shoppers braved the tumult to buy "big ticket" items and then discovered that the store had stopped selling appliances and television sets last fall.

the store is closed, the employees will dip into vast inventories to refill the shelves for the next wave of bargain hunters. And for those who wait, there is the promise of bigger discounts to come—as much as 75 percent—as the company tries to squeeze out as many dollars as possible for the dozens of creditors.

Merchandise from the remaining 359 stores was consolidated at 155 stores, including 18 in New Jersey, for the final sales. After the proceeds are paid over to the creditors, the company will disappear. The final sales are expected to yield $500 million.

Rate of Job Attrition as City Reduces Layoffs

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

The administration yesterday that it expects a current high rate of attrition to counter the next two years, the bulk of the payroll under the austerity plan probably will not be reduced by more than 10 percent.

Mayor Kenneth S. Jacobs said that the fiscal crisis—described as a freeze on raises, increased workloads and little opportunity for pension enhancement—has helped encourage early retirements. The original budget plan was that there would be 600 jobs closed each month through attrition, but the rate has been 1,080 jobs a month.

A total of 40,000 jobs have been closed out by the city in the fiscal crisis—more than 25,000 through layoffs, and more than 15,000 through attrition, he said.

With the revised austerity plan expected to be ready in the next week or so, Mr. Axelsson declined to discuss details. But he stressed the Mayor's recent theme that more help would have to be extended from the Federal and State Governments if the city was to cope with the austerity required under the fiscal plan.

"Going All Out" The city is cutting $200 million worth of personnel and programs in the current budget and, by the latest estimate, faces an additional $400 million in cutbacks in each of the next two years in order to eliminate its huge budget deficit by mid-1978.

Mr. Axelsson said the Mayor's revised plan would demonstrate that the city was going "all the way" to meet the cuts on its own. "No games," he said, "we're going all out on it."

Even if the relief from the state and Federal Governments will have to be sought, he said, echoing a view heard increasingly—even from members of the State Control Board.

Mr. Axelsson offered no data beyond the Shinn panel's reassurances that the attrition rate would not harm the pension systems. Other city officials speculated that one helpful factor might be the increasing investment by the pension funds in city obligations that carry interest rates that are more than double the rates earned by other pension investments.

Attrition's effect on the pension systems is only one part of a lengthy study conducted by the Shinn panel. The study has been focusing on the often-described actuarial weaknesses of the pension systems and how much more in the way of city contributions might be required to bolster them.

The report has not yet been released, but city officials have indicated that it might not affect the austerity plan immediately. Estimates are that as much as $2 million more a year might eventually be required of the city to improve the plans.

In other fiscal activities, the Board of Estimate approved a resolution by the Manhattan Borough President, Percy E. Sutton, that the Municipal Assistance Corporation begin selling small denominations of bonds to the public to help become major factors.

Construction of Housing Below 1932 Level Here

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

This is so because in the last two decades a sizable amount of new housing here has been financed with government assistance, much of it in the form of mortgage loans from the city and State. But in the last year both levels of government have become unable to borrow the money needed to make possible such mortgages.

Predictions among state and city officials and housing industry spokesmen range from an even worse showing this year to an insignificant upturn. Housing permits were down 37 percent last year in the state as a whole, with fewer than 33,000 units authorized. But the decline was far less in Suffolk County—only 6 percent—and more housing was authorized in Suffolk last year than in any other area of the state. In fact, the nearly 8,000 units authorized in Suffolk in 1975 were one-fourth the entire state total.

According to Lee E. Koppelman, executive director of the Nassau-Suffolk Regional Planning Board, the Suffolk showing indicates that the county has remained relatively strong economically, amid the overall recession. Lower land costs have also mitigated the housing downturn in Suffolk, which Mr. Koppelman sees as having costs.

Speaking of the situation in the state as a whole, Lee Goodwin, the State Housing Commissioner, said that besides the fiscal crisis in New York, other elements in the housing-construction decline have been the supply of chemicals and the shortage of steel, and a high mortgage and construction.

Pan American Indicted In Crash at Logan Field

then turned the packages over to Burlington Northern, acting as a freight forwarder. Burlington placed the packages into a sealed container that also carried corrosive chemicals each year, a random check showed that in nine out of 10 cases, Federal regulations—some minor and some major—were not complied with.

National Semiconductor was named in the 25-count indictment because the company had accepted responsibility as the official shipper. Lyons pleaded guilty to all 25 counts yesterday.

Lyons pleaded guilty to all 25 counts yesterday. Burlington Industries; the Lyons Moving and Storage Company of Los Angeles; Santini Brothers Inc. and the Santini employee, Mr. Higgins.

All were charged with "knowingly causing the transportation of hazardous material in violation of regulations of the Federal Aviation Administration." Steven Kimmelman, an assistant National Semiconductor official who conducted a five-month grand-jury investigation of the crash, said the series of events leading to it had begun when National Semiconductor found that its plant in Prestwick, Scotland, urgently needed a supply of chemicals and decided to send them by air.

It hired Lyons Moving and Storage to ship 25 bottles of sulfuric acid to the East Coast. According to the indictment, Lyons placed each bottle in a separate package. But, contrary to regulations, Lyons allegedly did not identify the hazardous material, did not include the words "This Side Up" or "This End Up" and did not include a marking showing that the package complied with Federal specifications.

Lyons, the indictment said,

Banks Expected to Buy Billion in State's Notes

the deficit of the fiscal year ending March 31. Still $600 million more in borrowing will be done by the state during the course of the subsequent fiscal year to finance capital construction programs and other items paid for out of long-term state bonds.

Out of the total $4.6 billion in state borrowing needs between now and March 31, 1977, roughly $1.9 billion is being financed by what state officials described only as "transient" among these, officials said, are the state employee retirement systems, which are also expected to lend the state construction agencies about $800 million over the next three years.

South Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania—Gradual clearing today, high in the mid-40's with a low in the 30's. Some showers and light rain in the mid-40's to around 50. Partly sunny and clear tomorrow with showers.

A survey by the Federal Reserve Board late last year showed that the New York City Clearing House banks held $82.4 million in state securities, although that figure is thought to be substantially less now because many of the securities have since matured.

Nevertheless, the $1 billion can be considered an enormous sum, particularly since the aggregate gross capital of the clearing house banks is about $11 billion. The Federal Reserve also showed that the banks held nearly $4 billion in all New York State—state agency and New York City obligations.

If banks had requested the Federal Reserve to give assurances that it would not "classify" the banks' loans to the state—that is, label them as questionable, which would force the banks to raise loans elsewhere at the end of the year, should the state's notes drop in market value.

The request for the Federal Reserve was said to be under consideration. The members of the clearing house are the Bank of New York, Chase Manhattan Bank, Citicorp Chemical Bank, Morgan Guaranty Trust, Manufacturers Hanover Trust, National Bank of North America, Irving Trust, Bankers Trust, Marine Midland Bank and the United States Trust Company.
